ADDICTED TO WAR

It is tax season, and I have stamped my envelope and sent my check to the state of Oregon, wishing there was a fairer tax structure with increased taxes for those with higher incomes and corporations, that provided much needed revenue for education, social, medical and other services.

But I will not voluntarily give a penny of my federal income tax to the federal government. Taxes of the wealthy and of corporations have been vastly reduced. Military expenditures have vastly increased, as the government invests billions for nuclear weapons in space, stations armed forces around the world, and pays for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Hundreds of U.S. soldiers and thousands of Iraqi people are being slaughtered. The national debt has climbed into more trillions and the entire Social Security "Trust" Fund has been loaned out. Medicare, vital to such a large proportion of our elderly population, is being dismantled. Human services are becoming virtually nonexistent. The U.S. budget is in shambles. The continued viability of the economy, and especially the dignified, stable lifestyles of millions of middle and lower income people, are threatened.

Let's look at our U.S. government in the same way we regard an addicted member of our family. Our government is addicted to war and has lost the abilities, structures, and habits of peace-making, of love. Sometimes, members of a family, and in this case, the general public of the United States, need to surround the addicted family member with love and with firmness, to say "No" to their addictive habits and help them re-learn how to live in a functional way.

My refused federal income tax and federal excise taxes on my telephone bills will be used for life-giving purposes. Retired General Hague once said, "Let them march all they want, if they pay their taxes."

A FEW GOOD COPS

I would like to praise Hanna Olsen's letter (4/1). Coming and saying something like that in Eugene is as bad as admitting you were a communist during the McCarthy trials. The one thing we all seem to forget is what she stated: Police officers are people and not all of them are bad as some people would like them to be.

I have much respect for the police officers of both Eugene and Springfield. And they have on more than one occasion either helped me when I was in danger or just helped me. When Kip Kinkle decided to shoot up my high school, the police were quick to respond. The ones I met handled the situation with care. The ones that took down our information were kind and polite. The Eugene police officers that I met and talked to during the Nike Town riot of October in that same year were all kind and respectable.

Am I saying that there are no bad officers? No, I am sure that there are a microscopic and tiny few who are, but this is a very tiny section of a larger group of fine, respectable people who day in and out put their lives on the line to save ours.

And by the way, could anyone find me the actual piece of paper or legislation that says there is a separation of church and state? "Freedom of religion," not Freedom from religion.

SHOOTING CANS

Thank you for Tom Lininger's opinion piece (3/25) about the recent Supreme Court decision resulting in obstacles for those prosecuting domestic violence cases. I found it informative and well thought out until Lininger, questioning the justice's opinion, wonders if he "was shooting cans with batterers the night before he issued the decision."

A Coalition to Defeat Bush

Learning from the Germans

It has not fully dawned on progressive, "Green"-oriented voters in this country that the expectedly close election may very well place in their astonished hands not only the power to defeat Bush but also push the Democratic Party in a bolder direction. The numbers from the last election irrefutably reveal that the Nader vote in many states was larger than the margin of difference between Bush and Gore.

Sharply contested elections have been seen elsewhere as golden opportunities to use crucially needed votes as "leverage" to move mainstream parties toward positive changes. In Germany in 2002, there was a very close election between the liberal Social Democratic Party (SDP) and the conservative Christian Democratic Union Party (CDU). The German Green Party recognized a chance to exercise influence and entered into negotiation with the SDP about Green-oriented policies it would be willing to support if a coalition between the two was able to defeat the conservatives. The Green vote indeed made the crucial difference and the coalition was formed.

German Coalition Advances Progressive Cause

A formal "Coalition Agreement" has been signed that includes the following: 1) All nuclear power plants in Germany will be phased out; 2) the principle of sustainable development shall be the "central goal of the government's reform policies, guiding the way government does its business;" 3) consumer protection will be recognized as a "central cross-cutting principle of government action;" 4) "on climate protection, Germany is to propose that the European Union adopt a 30 percent greenhouse gas reduction target and, if EU agrees, itself adopt a 40 percent target;" 5) an agricultural policy will be adopted that is "orientated to nature and people and their health" and which "rewards animal welfare;" and 6) extensive food labeling will be done to provide transparency and respect consumer choice regarding genetically modified foods.

In addition, Greens have been installed in the quite significant cabinet posts of foreign minister, environment minister, and minister of consumer protection, food and agriculture.

In the U.S., it would be quite a stretch to imagine people with Green credentials being appointed to secretary of state or director of the EPA. The "winner take all" system (as opposed to the more democratic system of proportional representation in places like Germany where 8 percent of the vote translates into 8 percent representation in government) does not allow for much influence by smaller political parties. Extremely close elections, however – even in systems like the U.S. – are one of the few exceptions to this general rule.

Strategic Alliance to Defeat Bush

A cooperative alliance could be formed between Sen. Kerry, Gov. Dean, Sen. Edwards, Rep. Kucinich and Nader. Kerry and Nader could negotiate their own form of the German Coalition Agreement. Nader could ask Kerry to use his executive powers to implement progressive changes and also propose and support specific legislation. He could request that Kerry commit to specific appointments. In return, Nader could agree to use his candidacy as a pulpit to promote his views but not seek ballot access in the key swing states.

One of this column's authors, Peter Sorenson, actually presented a proposal in early 2000 to Gore's campaign manager that is similar to what we now describe. He suggested that Gore offer to appoint Nader as attorney general. If this proposal had been accepted and implemented, it is very possible the entire election would have turned out differently.

Nader has agreed to meet with Kerry during April to discuss how they can "collaborate" toward the "common goal" of defeating Bush. Nader is to be commended for taking this step, one he refused four years ago. Even if these discussions do not bear immediate fruit, an all-important line of communication will have been established. Further into the election year, tensions on all sides are bound to increase. As this happens, it will be very fortuitous for Kerry and Nader to have initiated this link.

Many progressives are beginning to catch on to the rare and amazing power that this election may very well give them. Some are actively laying the groundwork for a German-style, strategic coalition between progressive Democrats and Greens called the Green Democratic Alliance. It is receiving its initial impetus right here in Eugene, where the concept was enthusiastically embraced by Kucinich in his recent visit. In order to share this concept nationwide, a website is about to be launched at www.greendemocraticalliance.org

The German Greens have "raised the bar" and challenged progressives worldwide to join them in a profound paradigm shift. Those who advocate for a sustainable way of life must begin to pro-actively direct government policy rather than react against it. If U.S. Greens and Green-sympathizers follow the inspiring path that has been demonstrated in Germany, the result will be such empowerment.

Pete Sorenson is a Democrat, working with the Kerry campaign, and a Lane County Commissioner. Spruce Houser has been involved in many Green-oriented public interest campaigns, including a ballot initiative to assert local democratic

With this sentence Lininger supports the classist stereotype that batterers are backwoods, uneducated drunks. Conversely, it promotes the idea that upstanding citizens are "above" abusive behavior. In actuality, domestic violence spans all cultures and socioeconomic classes.

Batterers can be "simple-minded hicks" as well as peace-loving hippies, police officers, or even law professors. Domestic violence is a choice — a choice supported by the beliefs of our society. These beliefs are based in sexism, as well as classism and myriad other forms of oppression. And they can show themselves in ways as overt as an affluent batterer evading prosecution, or as subtle as a joke about "shooting cans."

We need to change our own beliefs in order to remove an obstacle already before us: How do we hold batterers accountable when we believe that respected people aren't capable of domestic violence?

DON'T PAVE WETLANDS

At a transportation meeting held in Springfield, Judy Valpa, the mayor of Coburg, said she "knows" the people of this community want the West Eugene Parkway (WEP) to go through right when and where it is planned. She said she knows this, not by public testimony, but by reading letters to the editor.

We disagree with building the WEP. A new multi-lane expressway in the area will not ease traffic problems. We can learn from the mistakes of others. Los Angeles to the south has built many multi-lane roadways. Their traffic problems have not gone away. Now their land is paved and they still have traffic.

We can't afford this expenditure. Yes, there are matching funds of some kind. Let's not take something that's bad for us just because we can get it.

A great deal of time and money has gone into restoring and preserving the wetlands. Now they want to spend a great deal more to destroy, by paving, the very same wetlands. What a slap in the face to the people who foot the bill for both projects. We, as a community, have more pressing work to do together than to build another multi-lane expressway.

The people that have signed this letter have not made public testimony, nor have we written to the editor about this subject before. The following signers agree with this letter and urge our representatives to not push the parkway through.

PIERCY FOR MAYOR

What a pleasure to read the cogent article by Mary O'Brien, "Vibrant Democracy" (4/10)!

While I do not know Nancy Nathanson personally, Mary's recap of her behavior and voting record are most concerning.

I do know Kitty Piercy. She was my daughter's preschool teacher 10 years ago at the Patterson Co-op Preschool. My strong-willed 2 1/2-year-old daughter learned a lot from Kitty that year. In her own words, "No hit, no pinch, no bite." My daughter had been a challenge, but Kitty had taught her to "play nicely with others," just exactly what she needed to learn and when she needed to learn it. Kitty saw and capitalized on my daughter's strengths.

The next year I got to work more closely with Kitty as a parent board member of the Co-op. I found Kitty to consistently be enthusiastic, honest, fair-minded and always able to help a group of diverse and opinionated people to move forward as a group to adopt solutions that represented the highest good for all concerned.

With more and more people settling in our beautiful city, Eugene is faced with many different emerging issues. These issues will require the best leadership we have to manage the complexity and diverse interests involved. Sprawl is edging out West 11th, we're paving and building on our surrounding farmlands and endangering our wetlands, our school districts are struggling and people are still under- or unemployed.

Eugeneans will be making critical decisions about the future quality of our community life. We need the solid and proven experience, integrity, intellect and leadership of Kitty Piercy. If you love Eugene, vote for Kitty Piercy.

SLAPP ME SILLY

So many candidates for East Lane County Commissioner — how to choose? We think answering a couple questions can narrow the field. First, "Is a candidate more likely to represent the voters or special interests?" There was no better test of this than House Bill 2460 in the 2001 Oregon Legislature. We cosponsored HB 2460 to protect Oregonians against frivolous SLAPP (strategic lawsuits against public participation) suits. SLAPPs are groundless accusations meant solely to intimidate. They were primarily being used by developers to silence public opposition to their projects. Not surprisingly, the opposition to HB-2460 came from development interests who wanted to preserve this despicable weapon of legal and financial terrorism.

But the bill was a no-brainer. It sailed through the Legislature and was signed into law by Gov. John Kitzhaber. The vote in the House was 49-4 in favor. Cedric Hayden's was one of the four "no" votes. Hayden answered question #1 loudly and clearly.

Second, "Does a candidate care enough to address issues raised by constituents?" Of the remaining candidates, only Mark Herbert and Faye Stewart responded to our questions.

These observations give us at least some idea of how well the various candidates would represent their constituents. Accordingly, we will be recommending to our East Lane members that there are only two candidates worthy of their consideration for East Lane Commissioner.

BETTY'S BELIEF

I wonder how many Eugene citizens are aware of the key role that Betty Taylor played in getting the $17 million in redevelopment funds for the Eugene library. Throughout her first year on the City Council, in the face of major cuts in the city's budget, Betty asked over and over why redevelopment funds could not be used to make up the difference. Not getting a satisfactory answer, she requested a workshop on that issue. She refused to give up her belief that redevelopment funds could be used for more than traditional economic development programs. As a result, the council held a workshop. At that meeting, it became clear that significant funds were available, and that they could be used to build the library. The rest is history. If Betty hadn't been so determined, the new library might have had to wait many more years.

TRUE REFORM

Concrete tax reform in Oregon is still needed given the defeat of Measure 30. Now the out-of-state, anti-government group Citizens for a Sound Economy is pushing our legislators for a spending cap coupled with kicker reform. These sound very appealing and oh-so-very prudent. But it is not the answer to this state's budgeting woes. Oregon already passed a reasonable spending limit in 2001, which limits spending to 8 percent of personal income. We do not need a more restrictive cap.

A spending cap does not allow the state to save or implement funding for disasters or emergencies. Nor will it take into consideration a rise in public health need and crime rate increases.

A spending cap makes it impossible to pay for schools and other programs if voters pass another unfunded mandate like Measure 5 or Measure 11. Services and programs already devastated by cuts in funding will continue to struggle during an economic down-turn.

Oregon needs true tax reform in order to break its dependence on the personal income tax and find a more stable funding source. Until this happens, true tax reform will be out of reach.

Profiling America

What the government wants to know

By the time you read this, I will have broken a federal law. I will have withheld some of the personal information demanded by the U.S. Census Bureau's new American Community Survey (ACS). Some of you may recall the Census Bureau's "long form" sent during the last official Census. It asked a lot of questions about people's lives and lifestyles. While the long form has been around for decades and promises confidentiality, many Americans found the last edition (year 2000) to be intrusive — an invasion of their privacy. The ACS is a newly implemented annual update sent to a random sampling of American households, in order to keep the demographic data current, and to possibly eliminate the long form in the future.

More than a month ago, I received the ACS in the mail. Some of the questions were pretty nosy. Here's a partial list: Does our house have complete plumbing and flush toilets? How many bedrooms? Do we own or rent? What is the home's monetary value? Do we own it outright? What do we pay monthly for utilities, property tax, insurance, mortgage?

The questions about the people in our home are far more troubling. Here is a partial list of the information the survey demands regarding every member in our household: race; marital status; date of birth (not just age); citizenship status; level of education; what language(s) other than English is spoken; physical and neurological health status; childcare arrangements; employment status; method of transportation to work; time of day, to the minute, each person departs for work; income amount and sources; ancestry or ethnic origin

My concern over these questions goes beyond that of simple privacy. There is a chilling historical precedent for the misuse of census data — one not nearly as widely known as it deserves to be. That abuse was an integral part of the genocidal policies of Nazi Germany during World War II.

Edwin Black's extraordinary and meticulously documented book, IBM and the Holocaust, details how the Nazis used card-sorting machines (the nearest thing to computers in those days) leased from International Business Machines (and largely operated by that company) to sift through mountains of European census data in order to identify "undesirables" — Jews, Gypsies, physically and mentally handicapped people, and so on, and tag them for eventual destruction.

Survivors of that campaign of slaughter had no idea how the Nazis were able to so easily identify and locate their victims, for it was not just the active, practicing Jews who were shipped to extermination camps. Millions of culturally assimilated Jews, plus half-Jews and quarter-Jews (among others) were identified, marginalized, rounded up, starved, and ultimately murdered.

Black explains how it was done. The Nazis instituted a round-the-clock data-entry program that converted census data into encoded punch-cards that were then sorted in scores of machines, so that rosters of death could be compiled. Black's research indicates that the Nazis could triple the number of people they rounded up and killed in a given area, through the use of the card sorting machines.

Could a comparable program be instituted in the U.S., in the near future? The wholesale roundup of descendants of Hitler's victims does not appear to be at all likely. But if Jews, Gypsies and disabled people are not probable targets, the potential for serious abuse still exists. Consider that the government has already incarcerated hundreds at the Guantanamo military base, apparently in violation of international law — and that efforts have been made by the Bush administration to strip certain Americans of their constitutional rights and citizenship.

It is also my understanding that the anti-drug Public Law 100-690 could be used as a pretext to incarcerate political dissidents. The current political climate of indeterminate, undeclared war and civil rights compromised in the name of national security makes such abuses more likely than would be the case in saner times.

Meanwhile, the ACS's stated intention is to assess demographic patterns, in order to ascertain the need for new schools, fire stations, road improvements and the like, and no doubt the Census Bureau's employees are acting in good faith in their efforts to secure this data. And they guarantee confidentiality. But in an age of the USA PATRIOT Act, Homeland Security Act, and Bill of Rights Defense Committees, the potential for abuse of this information is staggering.

Steven Spielberg's holocaust docudrama, Schindler's List, insightfully opens with a scene of Nazi officials gathering census data from cooperative Jews. The ACS's massive profiling of America dwarfs anything the Nazis could have dreamed of. And consider this: The ACS comes with a pamphlet entitled, Your Guide for the American Community Survey. The last page in the guide contains a section with the heading, "Why the Census Bureau Asks Certain Questions." The questions covered are: name, value or rent, complete plumbing, place of birth, job, income, education, disability, and journey to work. No mention is made of the questions regarding race, citizenship status, languages spoken, or ancestry/ethnic origin.

My delay in filling out either of the two copies of the ACS mailed to me prompted one of their agents to call me on the phone in order to secure the data. (Incredibly, the survey's guide states, "If anyone in the household, such as a roomer or boarder, does not want to give you his or her personal information, print at least the person's name [and relationship to you] ... an interviewer will telephone to get the information from that person."

An agent will have called me back before you read this. Indeed, ACS personnel are authorized to go directly to people's homes to complete the survey.

I intend to answer any reasonable questions, including the homeowner information that is a matter of public record. I don't even mind telling them that my toilet flushes quite nicely. But my ethnicity and race, the languages I speak, my health status and the time I leave for work are none of their damn business. Perhaps my refusal to fully cooperate will "flag" me as a troublemaker, and they may fine me up to $100. I'll send them a check.

The ACS is an issue that has managed to stay "under the radar" for quite some time now. Hopefully, that is about to change.

Friendly Skies

How to make your connection

Ever notice how hard it is to find the LGBTQ people in airports? Air travel sure throws my gaydar all out of whack. Homo-looking guys turn out to be het men who've been Queer-eyed. Sauntering women with dykey haircuts are just Canadian.

The moving walkway carries me past unidentified strangers to my connecting flight. At least I see my people on TV. In all the waiting areas every newscast blares some same-sex marriage-related story. Go team.

I haven't eaten since dinner last night and am looking forward to some good old airplane food. Flying across time zones they usually manage to have you in the air between meals. But this flight takes four hours and no matter how you slice it, includes lunch time.

I've still got an hour's wait. The airport gift shop/newsstand is selling single pieces of fruit – the only living food on site – for $1.75. The apples are so shiny even Snow White would be suspicious. I pass, but salivate a little anyway.

Eventually I board, find my aisle seat and buckle in. Our flight attendant is very faggy. Straight men who work in this swishy profession tend to act extra macho to defy the stereotype, but this guy is a total queen. If feather boas were part of the allowable flight attendant uniform, he'd be flouncing one across his shoulder while he reminds you to stow that bag completely under the seat in front of you, Mary.

Thank God(dess) another member of my tribe is onboard. If I can make contact, he might slip me a packet of snack mix before takeoff. That would hold me until lunch. Then we get the bad news: no food. Airlines no longer offer in-flight meals. Who knew? On this 1700-mile flight they don't even serve pretzels. My belly gurgles disappointment.

We're told we can purchase a restaurant quality sandwich or salad for $10. The nerve. I do not have an extra $10 to spend on what's supposed to be included in the deal.

It's the principle of the thing. Airline meals are part of our culture. You can't change the rules. It's unnatural. It goes against tradition. Even the bible says "Let all who are hungry come and eat."

Where's the constitutional amendment codifying that the institution of air travel is a union between one person and one meal? (Rumor has it a few renegade airlines flout the law and issue meals anyway.)

Why should I have to pay for airplane food – something first class passengers take for granted? It's not fair that some of us are treated as second class. Unequal. Under less famished conditions, I'd raise hell, but there's no fight in me. I'm too hungry. I will have to tough it out.

We are all sealed into the oxygen deprivation chamber, aka the cabin. Nice word choice, but this cabin has no burbling brook nearby. No fireplace. Not even a moosehead, although some of us passengers could pass for dead animals, we're so lifeless from breathing recirculated jet fuel fumes. The flight attendant sashays down the aisle checking seatbelts. I try to send him homo vibes.

After takeoff, I open my tray table and set out my travel journal, my wedding photo on the cover. Miss Thang rolls by with his beverage cart. I make a point of glancing at the portrait of Wifey and me, and then up at him, flashing my best We Are Fam-i-ly smile. My stomach growls, but you can't hear it over the engine noise.

Apparently I've made contact. "Are you hungry?" I nod with my most LGBTQ-solidarity look. He leans in close, "I'll see if we can get you something – don't tell anybody."

At last, I get to cash in on those special rights we've heard so much about. Flyboy serves my food with a conspiratorial wink. I'm happy – in a carbon monoxide kind of way – all the way home.

The flight attendant sashays down the aisle checking seatbelts. I try to send him homo vibes.

OLCV RELEASES MAY PRIMARY ENDORSEMENTS

The Oregon League of Conservation Voters (OLCV) took a clear stand favoring Kitty Piercy over Nancy Nathanson in the Eugene mayor's race in its endorsements this week. OLCV's "Seal of Approval" tells voters which candidates they can trust to protect clean water, clean air, wildlife and farmland.

Receiving an OLCV endorsement are 69 candidates in 65 races across the state including 27 local candidates (see a complete endorsement list at www.olev.org).

"Almost every politician claims to be for a clean environment; but they don't all vote that way," says Jonathan Poisner, OLCV's executive director.

"Piercy has a proven track record of voting to protect clean water, making polluters pay to clean-up their messes, and supported Eugene's Toxics Right-to-Know program. Her lifetime environmental record is 87 percent," says Jennifer DeMuth of the Lane County chapter of OLCV. "Nancy Nathanson's record is in stark contrast, rating just 10 percent on OLCV's most recent Eugene City Council Scorecard. Nathanson voted against protecting Eugene's water quality, to weaken Eugene's Toxics Right-to-Know program, and to allow more sprawl onto farmland."

OLCV also endorsed council candidates Bonnie Bettman, Betty Taylor, Andrea Ortiz and Chris Pryor, along with County Commission candidate Pete Sorenson.

In legislative House races, OLCV endorsed both Mitzi Colbath and Paul Holvey in District 8, Phil Barnhart in District 11, Bob Ackerman in District 12 and Bev Fieck in District 14.

UO DESIGN CONFAB THIS WEEKEND

The emergence of earth-friendly design and sustainability get top billing, followed by "trashy fashion" in the 10th annual H.O.P.E.S. Conference at UO April 16-18.

Holistic Options for Planet Earth Sustainability is an ecological design gathering organized by students at the UO School of Architecture and Allied Arts. Students, professionals and community members are invited to the weekend of panels, workshops and speakers. See schedule <http://hopes.uoregon.edu>

Keynoters this year are Eric Lloyd Wright, Edward Blake Jr., Ananya Roy and Brock Dolman. Wright, grandson of Frank Lloyd Wright, is an architect specializing in organic architecture and green building design. Blake is a noted landscape architect from Mississippi. Roy is an author and professor of urban studies and planning at UC-Berkeley. Dolman is an ecologist, activist and educator at the Occidental Arts and Ecology Center north of San Francisco.

The conference's traditional 24-hour design charrette this year will focus on the potential of a Center for Applied Sustainable Living, a project now under way at UO.

Other topics to be discussed include urban biodiversity, integrating sustainability into professional practice, land use planning in Oregon, roof ponds for heating and cooling, designing for birds and recycled art. Saturday is the popular Trashy Fashion workshop, taking recycling to new heights of creativity and aesthetic appeal.

NEIGHBORHOODS VOICE CONCERNS FOR RAILYARD

An April 5 letter to city officials from four neighborhood groups outlines their concerns for the future of the Union Pacific railyard, and asks for more citizen input regarding development plans.

The letter cites heavy contamination of soil and ground water in the area, toxic fumes from locomotives, noise, and the barrier imposed by the tracks themselves.

"Speculation about the future of the railyard has increased since UP began decommissioning many of its operations in recent years," reads the letter. "As a large corridor of relatively undeveloped land within our urban growth boundary, the railyard is attractive to land speculators and developers."

The letter, representing the Trainsong, Whiteaker, Bethel and River Road neighborhood associations, voices concerns that the area will be heavily industrialized without citizen input. "The same factors that make the railyard attractive to industrial developers also make it attractive for parks and open space, as a possible alternative transportation corridor, and for planned mixed use nodal development. A mix of appropriate land uses offers the potential to improve the environmental health, livability, and connectivity of our existing neighborhoods," reads the letter. "On the other hand, heavy industrial uses often pose significant land use conflicts with existing residential areas."

In a final statement, the groups say, "Please also consider this a formal request from each of us to be treated as 'interested parties' on all matters related to the Eugene Union Pacific railyard."

UO HONORS EARTH DAY WITH JULIA BUTTERFLY HILL

To celebrate Earth Day 2004, the UO Cultural Forum, ASUO and Oregon Beaming Bioneers will sponsor the workshop "Personal and Planetary Healing" by activist Julia Butterfly Hill on Wednesday April 21, 2-3:30 pm in the UO EMU Fir Room.

For 738 days Hill lived in the canopy of an ancient redwood tree called Luna to help make the world aware of the plight of ancient forests. After her two-year vigil, Hill successfully negotiated to permanently protect the 1,000-year-old tree along with a nearly three-acre buffer zone surrounding it.

On December 18, 1999, 26-year-old Hill came down to a world that recognized her as a heroine and powerful voice for the environment. Her courage, commitment and profound clarity in articulating a message of hope, empowerment, and love and respect for all life has inspired millions of people worldwide.

Since 1999, Hill and other forest activists founded Circle of Life (of which

There is $10 to $50 sliding scale donation for the workshop with Hill. Reservations are recommended. The UO Earth Day celebration will conclude with a social hour and book signing by Hill (author of The Legacy of Luna and One Makes a Difference).

Proceeds from the workshop benefit an October gathering planned by Oregon Beaming Bioneers. For more info, contact Jeremy Olsen at jeolsen@uoregon.edu or by phone at 346-4352.

CORRECTIONS/CLARIFICATIONS

A title ascribed to "The Executioner's Song" in last week's Visual Arts column on the sculpture of Jerry Harris should have been "Screaming Mother And Child." Harris's art can be seen at <http://members.tripod.com/media56/index.htm>

Regarding last week's Slant column, a Corvallis readers tells us depleted uranium doesn't quite have twice the density of lead. The Handbook of Chemistry and Physics lists uranium's density as approx. 18.95, while that of lead is 11.35, which would make uranium approximately 1.67 times as dense as lead.

A wrong photo was used in our "What's Happening" page last week for Les Ballets Africains. The small photo was of the Paul Taylor 2 company that performs April 23.

• Portland attorney Dan Meek was at Eugene City Club last week to talk about one of our favorite topics, campaign finance reform. Penalties for duplicate signatures killed the 2002 attempt to get a spending-limits constitutional amendment on the ballot, but Meek, Lloyd Marbet and other die-hard reformers are a persistent bunch. Meek reminds us that campaign spending in Oregon has increased by a factor of 12 over the past six years and it's only going to get worse. Oregon is one of six states without spending limits, so more and more national money will likely be pumped into Oregon congressional races. "The candidate who spends the most wins 91 percent of the time," Meek says. The new initiative is called Petition 53 and it bans corporations, labor unions and other entities from contributing to candidate campaigns. Individuals can contribute up to $500 in statewide partisan races. We'll revisit this campaign later since the signature deadline is not until July 2. The website is www.voters.net and the Eugene contact is Pam Driscoll at 343-5628 or PamelaCypress@yahoo.com

• Wal-Mart in west Eugene applied in February to become a "supercenter," expanding by 68,000 sq. ft. to include a huge grocery store. Fed up California citizens are fighting Wal-Mart supercenters with ballot measures, recognizing that these big stores swallow up small businesses and living wage jobs, and foster a culture of concrete. Eugene's antiquated development regulations permit (and even encourage) such monsters, but the rules can be changed. Ashland, Corvallis and other communities have managed to keep out big box stores. The Eugene City Council has mega-retailers on its May 24 work session agenda, and labor groups are protesting Wal-Mart's expansion plans at a rally at 5 pm April 22 at West 11th and Commerce. Meanwhile, we can vote with our dollars by shopping at locally owned businesses.

• Word on the digital street is that Arianna Huffington is coming to Eugene next month on tour with her 10th book, Fanatics and Fools: The Game Plan For Winning Back America. She plans to speak at the McDonald Theatre the evening of May 6. Stay tuned for details. Two days later on May 8, Amy Goodman of the Democracy Now! public radio program is expected to stop here on her national tour marking the launch of her first book, The Exception to the Rule: Exposing Oily Politicians, War Profiteers, and the Media That Love Them. Time is 7 pm and venue is 150 Columbia on Campus.

• The track record of County Commissioner Anna Morrison is being carefully documented on a new website www.annamorrison.org, which is linked to www.annawatch.com. Mayor Power

Race for 'ceremonial' job has a lot at stake.

The Eugene City Charter gives the mayor little explicit power. He can't tell anyone what to do, and he only gets to vote in case of a city council tie.

But then why are conservative Nancy Nathanson and progressive Kitty Piercy spending tens of thousands of dollars in a hotly contested race for mayor? A look at how the city really works reveals the mayor's job is far more than ceremonial.

With the community and city council often split on important issues, the mayor's ability to break tie votes can be a lot more powerful than it sounds. In the past five years, Mayor Jim Torrey has broken ties on major issues 13 times. Without Torrey's pro-big business and developer tie-breaking votes, big box stores might face a moratorium, the West Eugene Parkway might have been stopped, sprawl subsidies may have been cut, a new riverfront highway downtown might have been blocked, a new rental housing code might protect students and the poor, Hynix might not have gotten $2 million in tax breaks and city council wards wouldn't have been gerrymandered to make the council more conservative.

council appoints a permanent replacement. In recent years, these "temporary" appointments chosen by the mayor alone have served longer than the permanent managers the council has appointed.

The mayor's powerful influence also extends beyond city hall.

Local TV stations and The Register-Guard feature statements from Torrey "very predominately in many, many stories," Bettman says. "He's practically the spokesperson for the city."

With such media exposure, as well as speaking engagements, the mayor "sets the tone for the city" and his characterizations of city issues, policies and initiatives become the conventional wisdom, according to Bettman.

"He has a very significant bully pulpit," Kelly says.

The city charter calls for the mayor to give an annual state of the city address. While the mayor often doesn't always get what he wants, Kelly says staff often use the mayor's speech to focus city staff and money on accomplishing his goals.

With the community and city council often split on important issues, the mayor's ability to break tie votes can be a lot more powerful than it sounds.

The mayor also has the power to veto city council ordinances. This has very rarely happened in Eugene, and a two-thirds council vote can override a veto. But the council did recently pull protections for transgender people out of a human rights ordinance after Mayor Torrey threatened to veto it.

The lack of a mayoral veto can also be critical, says councilor David Kelly. If the mayor has the backing of a strong council majority for his policies, "his power is unlimited," Kelly says.

The real power in Eugene's form of government is not with elected officials, but with the unelected city manager and his staff. Under the city charter, the manager hires, fires and commands all city employees and city contractors. The council appoints and fires the city manager and can only control and direct the city through its influence on the manager. And the mayor has much more influence than individual councilors.

City staff often look to the mayor as the representative of the will of the entire city rather than just the individual wards councilors were elected in, says councilor Kelly.

The mayor's office in city hall with a secretary and next to the city manager's office is also vitally important, councilor Bonny Bettman says. The office means frequent contact with the manager and other staff. Councilors who don't have individual city hall offices can feel out of the loop when it comes to important city issues. But Bettman says the mayor "is not only in the loop, he is the loop."

"The mayor meets with department managers a whole lot more than individual councilors," Kelly agrees.

The mayor also has the major power to appoint temporary city managers until the

Another power source for the mayor is appointments. The mayor appoints councilors and citizens to the city's dozens of committees, often with little council oversight.

Some committees wield considerable power, Bettman says. The Metropolitan Planning Commission decides how to spend millions in road money, for example.

A new economic development committee recently appointed by the mayor is heavily weighted toward tax break supporters and could result in a new wave of local corporate welfare, critics have charged.

The mayor also plays a strong role in setting the local policy agenda. It takes four councilors to get an item on the city agenda. But the mayor only needs the agreement of the city manager, who very rarely blocks his requests in weekly agenda meetings, according to Kelly. In terms of agenda setting, "the mayor has four times the power of any councilor."

The mayor presides over council meetings. Kelly says Torrey almost always does an impartial job of handling turns to speak. But the councilor says if the presiding wasn't done fairly, "it could have a powerful effect."

Many of the mayor's powers depend on others going along with it. A conservative manager and staff could choose to ignore a more liberal mayor. The conservative mainstream media could also ignore a liberal mayor despite the bully pulpit. Councilors could vote to change the rules for who makes committee appointments and sets meeting agendas and could direct staff to pursue their goals and not the mayor's.

But even then, the mayor would still hold a key focal point of local government. "The mayor's office is about leadership," Bettman says. EW

Growing Progress

Cobb, Kucinich share similar message with Eugene.

If you aren't familiar with the name David Cobb, you're not alone. And that may say more about the current floundering of the Green Party, of which Cobb is the front-running nominee for presidential candidate, than any other factor.

In fact Cobb, who will be in Eugene Thursday April 15, has as his primary goal not winning the election, but growing his party. "The Green Party is poised to be the electoral arm of the growing movement for peace, justice, ecology and democracy," he says. Although he calls George Bush "a big problem," and says his foreign policy "puts us at war with the rest of the world," Cobb says the real problem is "a continuing empire of the military-industrial complex and the transnational corporate empire that supports it."

Cobb believes the Greens, not the Democrats, are the way to pave a better future.

"I'd rather go into states where Kerry or Bush are gonna win so we can say, 'Don't waste your vote on a foregone conclusion.'"

But, Cobb adds, it's a complicated strategy. "Some swing states we must campaign in." Like Iowa, where election law (written by Dems and Reps) says a minor party must get 3 percent of the vote for a presidential candidate to maintain a ballot line.

"I pledged to campaign aggressively and hard in Iowa to secure 3 percent. It's unfortunate, but it's what the election code says." Ultimately, Cobb says, after his primary goal of building the party, his secondary goal is that the election culminates with Bush out of the White House. And, he adds, "Wherever possible, we want to achieve both."

Back to the Democratic primaries. If it's "where progressive politics goes to die," then how does he explain Dennis Kucinich, who came through Eugene again Wednesday,

'The Democratic Party presidential primary process is the place where progressive politics goes to die.'

- David Cobb, Green Party Presidential Candidate

The 40-year-old former attorney from Texas, who's now situated in Humboldt County and an organizer with Democracy Unlimited, worked actively on the campaigns of Jesse Jackson in 1984 and Jerry Brown in '88 and '92. "I can sum up in one sentence what I learned in those campaigns," says Cobb. "The Democratic Party presidential primary process is the place where progressive politics goes to die."

Despite the enthusiasm and excitement generated, at the end of the day, he says, "it's the big money and corporations that control the process and squash us and we don't have something that lasts to build upon."

And he wants to build something. In fact, Cobb proves that one person really can make a difference. He helped put Greens on the ballot in Texas in 2000 by collecting 76,000 signatures in 75 days from registered voters who had ignored the Democratic and Republican primaries.

And Greens do grow. In 1996, with Ralph Nader as presidential candidate, there were 10 organized state Green parties in the U.S. Five had a ballot line. That year, 40 Greens were elected across the country. By 2000, again with Nader at the helm, the Greens had 21 organized state parties. Ten states had a ballot line and 87 Greens countrywide were elected in local contests.

This year, there are 44 organized state Green parties, 23 have a guaranteed ballot line, and 205 Greens sit in elected office across the country. "We are getting larger, stronger and better organized with every election cycle," says Cobb.

But Cobb is very clear he doesn't want to see what happened in 2000, with Nader potentially pushing the swing states right into Republican hands, happen again.

Cobb wants to employ a strategic states campaign, where the Green party presidential candidate focuses energy and resources into those states where the electoral college does

April 14 in anticipation of the May 18 primary, and is trumpeting the message that the Democratic Party must lead us out of the Iraq war?

While Cobb concedes that Kucinich is expressing his values and principles without selling out, "he is already irrelevant in the 2004 elections cycle," he says, adding that Kucinich is merely keeping progressives in the Democratic Party who ought to leave and join the Greens.

Yet Kucinich, who knows the show went to Kerry after the New Hampshire and Iowa primaries, shrugs off any accusations of irrelevance. As long as he's in the race, he can draw attention to what progressives want.

"People are increasingly concerned about peace," he says. Kucinich has loudly dismissed the June 30 transfer of power in Iraq as a hoax, and says it may keep the U.S. in the war so long "we could be facing another Vietnam." He says he's remained in the race because he "made a commitment" and because "the Democratic Party must stand for peace." He says he wants to "persuade the party that Americans are fed up with the failed policies of a war president, and want something more than a Democratic version of a Republican war."

As to his return to Eugene and his lengthy presence in Oregon, Kucinich says it's not only that Oregon has one of the last primaries, but that "people in Oregon are hearing." His views on universal healthcare, the environment, labor, and who can forget — his U.S. Department of Peace — resound loudly with those in this state.

Cobb and Kucinich are each stumping for progress, and ultimately want Bush out of the White House. Perhaps that place of agreement is the nexus to build upon, a place of peace.

David Cobb will appear at the Green Party presidential debate with Tim Hermach and Kitty Piercy at 5pm, Thursday, April 15 at the Strand, 8th and Charnelton.

DAVE JOHNSON

—On a Roll—

BY DAVE JOHNSON

Oregon Bus Project activates youth, gets out vote.

On a spring day 35 years ago, an imperialistic misadventure was raging in S.E. Asia, Eugene was shape-shifting into a political animal with sharp teeth, I was covering an anti-war rally for a local underground monthly and a young Chicago bluesman named Charlie Musselwhite was playing harmonica in a bowling alley turned rock venue across from the McDonald Theatre.

Fast forward to a glorious morning in early April, 2004. A dubious hostility was in full throttle in blood-drenched Mesopotamia, I was in Eugene, covering the launch of a progressive political group for this slightly above-ground weekly and still-truckin' Charlie Musselwhite was blowing harp in K-Falls and heading north.

Life is less and less linear as time goes by, I thought on this uncommonly balmy Saturday, as I strolled toward mayoral candidate Kitty Piercy's campaign headquarters around the corner from the Keystone Café.

Folks were relaxing and kids were playing across Washington Street in a greenway that was once the residential heartland of West Eugene before they flung the bridge across the wide Willamette.

The setting and parallel circumstance suffused me with bittersweet nostalgia for my days as a rebel with a ponytail and a world to save, and a lingering affection for the lumber/college town that had redefined itself as a safe harbor for lively dissent and alternative lifestyles.

My assignment was to write about the launch of a local branch of the Oregon Bus Project, a youth-driven outfit in its third year of jumpstarting placid constituencies in the Oregon outback. With today's action, the project was challenging Eugene to hop off its liberal laurels and "get on the bus."

Key to the great notion of motoring about the electoral landscape is that it is a means to engage young people in the political system. If they are sent out to knock on doors and stir up dust, their enthusiasm will lead to meaningful change in our society. Or to borrow from Pogo, we have seen the future and they are us.

Two days ago, I had listened to my landlord in his curmudgeon mode snarl, "I'm not voting for Bush or Kerry — they're both liars!" Disgruntled folks in anarchistic factions are also loathe to vote and thus support a rigged and corrupt regime. As a result, elections are won by those who show up and the system muddles along.

I entered Piercy's HQ to discover a safehouse from this rampant cynicism and despair. A hive of worker bees was handing out name tags, slicing bagels and sipping java while revved up volunteers intermingled with the campaign staff and bus crew. I counted 30, all watched over by Jennifer Yocum, the calm, hands-off director of operations for the Oregon Bus Project.

It was pleasant to make eye-contact with a few gray-bearded and silver-tressed veterans of past skirmishes, heartening to see mid-stride politicians organizing the gig in the true spirit of Joe Hill, and a hoot to notice a good turn-out of more than a dozen teenagers.

The proceedings began with a greeting from James

Mattiace and Heather Brule, co-chairs of the Lane Branch. They invited volunteers to grab one of the clipboards stacked on the table in the corner and hit the streets to visit the registered voters at addresses highlighted in yellow. The pertinent question to ask was, "Do you plan to vote for Kitty Piercy? If not, thanks for your time and if you're undecided, here's a pamphlet listing Kitty's viewpoints and achievements."

The next speaker was County Commissioner Peter Sorenson, a familiar face and voice, with a long history of populist politics in Lane County.

"This Bus Project is the best thing happening in Oregon politics!" he enthused. "It's a refreshing innovation and I'm glad to have been an early supporter."

Sorenson played to his hometown crowd with an affable jab at the original site of the bus project — a pocket-sized metropolis he described as a ways "downstream."

I currently live in Portland so I'm familiar with the smug self-absorption that permeates that beacon of cultural and intellectual superiority. But not all Stumptowners are full of their urbane selves. Jefferson Smith for example.

A downtown attorney and the alpha sparkplug of the Oregon Bus Project, Smith is familiar with the political history of riding buses for social justice. As he reminded the Portland media when the project began in 2002, Freedom Riders promoted integration of segregated buses throughout the South in the early '60s by refusing to sit in the back. A shrewd politico, he's also hip to the popularity of whistle-stop campaigning from town to town, outpost to village.

Jefferson Smith, founder of the Bus Project

It began when Smith, a graduate from the UO and Harvard Law School, was schmoozing with cronies in the Rogue Pub, a short distance from the campus of Portland State University. They all shared a lament that there was a critical need to engage disaffected youth in the political process. The stats were grim. Those between 18 and 34 comprise 30 percent of the voter population, and only 20 percent of that group register to vote.

After a few schooners of microbrew, Smith came up with the idea of acquiring a bus, loading it with youthful activists, and touring Oregon to get out the vote and encourage progressive thought. He kept his day job as a corporate lawyer for Stoel Rives, but decided, in that saloon, to dedicate himself to changing the legislative landscape.

More than one participant in the project has assured me that their boyish, charismatic founder is definitely headed for high office. Smith says he doesn't have political aspirations but rather suffers political trepidations. It's an uplifting attitude I find neither jaded nor naïve but rather well-timed.

"I believe we can create a constituency for the common good," he told Oregonian columnist S. Renee Mitchell. "We're trying to raise the level of debate. Government is either evil or good depending on what we do."

Smith has assembled a core group of volunteers for the Bus Project who call what they do "a new kind of campaign: no television, no radio, no big money, no single candidate or special interest. Just people, issues they care about, a square coastal state and a bus."

The project's godfather is former Governor John Kitzhaber who was taken with the bus concept and lent his full support. He says that he was apolitical for his first two decades and easily understands why the political system is no longer relevant to many young people. As a way to reconnect youthful voters, he says we should create small, activist governments to replace paternalistic administrations.

Kitzhaber was at the EcoTrust building in Portland in Spring 2002 to officially christen the bus with a bottle of champagne he smashed across its blunt bow. After the ceremony the 10-wheeler hit the road and an estimated 70,000 doors were knocked on during that year's electoral cycle. Most of the door-rappers were under 30.

Others who took a seat included Secretary of State Bill Bradbury, Congressman Earl Blumenauer, and former Gov. Barbara Roberts, who said it was "The most exciting thing in Oregon politics in 20 years."

Now, in this fiercely political year, the Oregon Bus Project is all over the map with an office located in southeast Portland and free beer and pizza rallies held on Third Thursdays at Disjecta, a trendy watering hole in Northeast Portland.

At a Disjecta blowout, held Feb. 19, the bus brigade was joined by PCUN (Northwest Treeplanters and farmworkers United), OABA (Oregon Assembly for Black Affairs), BRO (Basic Rights for Oregon), NARAL Pro-Choice, and Planned Parenthood Advocates to collaborate and boogie all night long. A poster for the shindig asked, "Who says the political process can't be sexy?"

Now it was Eugene's turn. Smith bounded onstage to deliver a pep talk. He started with an historical note that the Greeks had a word for citizens who refused to vote. They called them idiots.

He added that this traditional apathy has led to the current crisis of volunteerism and closed by challenging the canvassers to "recapture the spirit of community" that led their city to political prominence three decades ago.

The last speaker was the star of the show, Kitty Piercy, a Planned Parenthood executive and former state representative, who said she was excited about the busloads of supporters

Bus on the Move

Here's an itinerary of spring trips planned by the Lane Branch of the Oregon Bus Project:

On Friday, April 16, founder Jefferson Smith will talk at the Eugene City Club at noon and the bus will hit the road for Don Hampton on Saturday, April 17.

On Saturday, May 1, campaign volunteers for Betty Taylor will meet at Tsunami Books at 10 am for a rally before embarking in the bus. Contact volunteer coordinator Kate O'Donnell at kato@efn.org or 344-1946.

A bus trek is planned for Andrea Ortiz on Saturday, May 15. For more information, call her campaign manager, Michael Carrigan at 342-1953. If your weekends are jammed, ask the organizers about weekday bus outings.

For general information about the local activities of the Bus Project, contact coordinator James Mattiace at 541-914-0293 or jamesmattiace@yahoo.com. And for statewide bus action, contact Jennifer Yokum at Jennifer@busproject.org, try bus@busproject.org or investigate the project's websites: www.secretplan.org and www.busproject.org.

The Oregon Bus Project is also affiliated with an informative, sleek, punk-friendly 'zine called The Zephyr, (www.zephyrmagazine.com). This 'zine will provide details on clumps of grassroots sprouting throughout the Oregon Territory.

who were about to head for the neighborhoods. She explained that she has had a long history with the young people of Oregon.

Continuing the theme that began with my wistful reverie and Smith's toss of the sociopolitical gauntlet, Piercy insisted that we had to get beneath the glossy veneer of progressive politics and make things happen.

Wow! I liked her for Eugene mayor. She is a no-nonsense straight-shooter, gracious when talking about the guy she may replace, yet firm in her vision of changes needed in the oft-stodgy Emerald Empire.

After an interview rehearsal held by coordinators Ethan Firpo and Slade Leeson and Smith's hilarious demonstration on how to model Kitty Piercy's lawn signs as sandwich boards, the canvassers headed for their cars or boarded the bus parked in the alley next to the warehouse turned staging area.

Recalling Ken Kesey's notorious assertion that, "You are either on the bus or off the bus," I clambered onto the 1980 GMC 14-seater adorned with a Kitty for Mayor banner.

It was a little squirt compared to the 1978 charter bus I rode in last month on a Bus Project cruise to canvas Lincoln City for Measure 30.

We had meandered up and down hilly 'hoods, chatting with Lincoln City coasties. Some were friendly, others were tight-lipped or non-responsive and a few of our inquiries were met with no response other than a moving shadow or a ripple of a curtain.

I was curious to see how Eugeneans would respond but first, I snapped my seatbelt and quizzed pilot Cary Thompson about the bus. He said it was once used to transport seniors at the Kaufman Center on Jefferson Street. Thompson said he had participated in early discussions to start a Eugene political action committee (PAC) with a progressive tilt. After the success of the Portland bus, he decided to buy the rig he calls the "busette." It's too small for a cadre of politicians beating bushes throughout the state, but it's suitable for local campaigns.

He laughed as he shared the news that insurance coverage for the bus was nailed down at 8 pm last night. We might be rag-tag radicals but we were street-legal!

On the way to assigned streets, Thompson staged a drive-by of the Saturday Market. The bus gang hollered and waved at the crowd of vendors and browsers, exhorting them to remember to vote.

As the bus entered the westside, Adrienne Stuart, a glib, comedic cheerleader for the cause, fired one-liners at pedestrians and folks gardening in their front yards. Her comment about the bus was, well, it does lean a little to the left.

At 18th Avenue and Pierce, a trio of students from Springfield High School disembarked to start their canvas. Juniors Erin Gray and Tia Léon and sophomore Matt McCune agreed to let me tag along.

As we hoofed south toward the foothills, working one side of the street, we outdistanced a postal carrier who reflected that he actually earned wages to go door-to-door. The novice canvassers' first few encounters left them a bit edgy but they loosened up as responses to their inquiries blended into a mixed bag of rude dudes slamming doors, a few friendly "you betchas," a "come back later, give me some time to think,"

PIERCY INSISTED THAT WE HAD TO GET BENEATH THE GLOSSY VENEER OF PROGRESSIVE POLITICS AND MAKE THINGS HAPPEN.

and a "I remember back when she was a teacher. I like her a lot."

I stationed myself at corners or next to a tree or bush, at a discreet distance from the canvassers. At times, I felt as if I were one of those chaperones who sit quietly in the sedan while budding evangelicals in prim dresses and natty suits passed out fliers and pamphlets.

I sensed that the students were initially discouraged by the chilly reactions to their cold calls, remembering my failure to sell encyclopedias during a two-week stint in my college days when I was more desperate for a living wage than I am now.

Valiantly, with grit and goodwill, the troika toiled up the street while dogs howled, poodles yapped, lawn-mowers growled, and garage and yard sale entrepreneurs dismissed them as potential customers.

Tia was the keeper of the map and announced the next address, Erin was the spokesperson who had the moxie and charm to talk to anybody, and Matt lightened our mood with droll commentaries on scruffy landscaping, "sketchy" households and citizens he considered seriously asleep at the switch.

After climbing up into the west hills, we made a U-turn at 23rd and headed back toward 18th. Along the way, the crew encountered an officially registered voter with a cell-phone glued to her left ear, who truculently informed them she had quit voting for good so leave me alone. A burly fellow, strapping an off-road four-wheeler in a pickup bed, announced that no way was he going to vote for Piercy. What was their first clue?

Next, to prove the Taoist maxim of natural balance, Erin knocked on Charles Wright's door and we got a live one. Resplendent in a purple tie-dyed T-shirt, he listened politely, said he was probably going to vote for Piercy and treated the Springfield High Schoolers as coequals. It was a lovely reminder that communal consciousness still has a pulse in this grim, contentious world.

A block later, we reached our bus stop on 18th, alerted the driver via the phone waves, sprawled on some grass and nibbled sub sandwiches until the bus arrived. EW

SPRING 2004

Springtime in the Emerald City marks the move from the soups and stews of winter out into the budding hopefulness of spring gardens and Farmers Market. Had a chance to check out the Market's beautiful baby carrots, striking red radishes, stunning bok choy? The loveliness of the Farmers Market fruit, veggie and organics goodness will inspire you.

And speaking of inspiration, how about the Saturday Market food court? Nothing says spring in Eugene like the throngs of people standing patiently in line for the long awaited return of Saturday favorites. The crowds at both Saturday and Farmers Markets are proof positive of a powerful local economy, one that draws droves of people in serious numbers.

So we hope you get out there – whether it's out to market, out in the garden, or just out to the patio seating at your favorite dining spot. And we hope you find this issue of Chow! helpful in exploring the glories of vernal victuals: Lance Sparks introduces Eugene's local wineries; Marina Taylor shows us the charm of Springfield's Pump Café; and I'll give you the lowdown on the panini trend in Eugene. Enjoy! – Bobbie Willis

Get Back, Napa!

The outlying and urban wineries of Eugene. BY LANCE SPARKS

Recent cover story in Main Ingredient, trade mag published by the Oregon Restaurant Association, headlines: "Oregon Wines Are Hot." Possible responses: Wow, no kidding? Whodathunk? Or: PICK UP YOUR MESSAGES, PEOPLE!

Oregon wines have been bustin' out all over. We've had a nearly decade-long run of vintages that rated from very good to outstanding (with a couple of shaky years, '95 and '97, when some folks made yummy wines and others struggled). Oregon pinot noir in particular — a winelover's daydream and a grape-grower's nightmare — has roused rave reviews from the world wine press. But Oregon pinot gris — crisply dry white that keeps lovely company with fish (especially salmon) — has elicited equal or greater enthusiasm. Lately, other whites — pinot blanc, riesling, gewurztraminer — have earned stellar ratings. Even some "big reds" (cabernet sauvignon, syrah, merlot, zinfandel) from our high-heat regions, such as the Rogue Valley and the Columbia Gorge, have drawn grudging respect. Add it up: Just a few decades ago wine sages argued that Oregon was too cool, too wet, too something to grow wine grapes; now, the only real questions that remain involve deciding just which of our valleys will be best for certain wine.

The real news — MESSAGE COMING IN! — is that Eugene ranks among the best wine areas in the state. Oh, sure, wandering wine mavens still gravitate to Polk and Yamhill counties, drawn by labels with glam and bling — Domaine Drouhin with its French cachet comes to mind — but the juice produced in and around Bluegene is elbowing local labels into the front rows.

Our fair burg is ringed by strong vineyards and producers. Start at Monroe where Benton Lane just completed a new facility and where Broadley Vineyards has thrived for decades (their '94 Claudia's Choice Pinot Noir was rated top pinot in the world for that vintage by Wine Spectator). In tiny Cheshire, we have Rain Song. Junction City boasts High Pass. Elmira's got LaVelle Vineyards with a broad array of wines and a beautiful tasting room in the Fifth Street Market. Secret House Vineyards in Veneta also produces a strong line-up, including some very good sparkling wines. For wild variety of unusual wines, though, little Lorane's Chateau Lorane has few rivals.

But Eugene itself has been showing real muscle at the center of the ring:

Hinman/Silvan Ridge is one of the vors and perfectly balanced. We also love the Silvan Ridge Early Muscat, a semi-sparkling dessert wine with delicate lychee-like fruit, just terrific.

The stronghold for Eugene wineries is the castle on the hill, King Estate. King wines rate consistently among the state's best — especially their stylish pinot gris, regular and reserve, but their single-vineyard and Estate pinot noirs, which are distinctive and distinguished, defined by that special quality called

The real news — MESSAGE COMING IN! — is that Eugene ranks among the best wine areas in the state.

most venerable sites in Oregon (est. 1979), and since being acquired by the Chambers family has been dedicated to producing top quality wines, especially pinot noir and gris, but also some surprises: We recently tasted the Silvan Ridge 2002 Viognier, a dry white traditionally grown in France's Rhone Valley; the SR version was delicious, crisp with bright fruit flavor, the complex flavors of defined place. But the skilled King staff have also extended their expertise and use of their state-of-the-art facilities to other winemakers. This kind of collegiality, in contrast to cut-throat competitiveness, can only ensure that Oregon wines continue to develop and the industry to mature, and all ships rise on the rising tide.

Case in point, Eugene's newest label, J. Albin Winery: John Albin has been growing grapes for "23 years and going" in northeast Yamhill, selling fruit to top growers. In 2000, Albin made his first wines under his own label through a cooperative arrangement with King Estate. Albin's 2002 Pinot Gris is bright and lively, the 2001 Pinot Noir rich and round.

Oregon pinot noir in particular — and a grape-grower's nightmare — has roused rave reviews from the world wine press.

Bruce and Bettina Biehl's Eugene Wine Cellars is located smack in the heart of the city, 255 Madison Street, and their broad line-up of wines can be sampled in their tasting room.

Bottles and barrels, Territorial Vineyards & Wine Company

Drop in Wednesday nights, when live music and fine food from Koho Bistro round out the tasting experience. Bruce Biehl has been managing Oregon vineyards for 25 years, notably at King Estate, has been in on the birth of many vineyards, knows the best growers and sources for grapes. EWC wines have been consistently high quality and affordable, are featured in many local restaurants by the glass. All are good, some special: EWC 2001 Melon (a French grape, not cantaloupe or casaba) shows a pretty tangerine note; 2000 Merlot uses Washington grapes, is big, a bit tannic, should be fine with some bottle-age; 2001 Syrah is bold, mouth-filling.

Territorial Vineyards & Wine Company has opened at 907 W. 3rd, producing some fine vino: Territorial 2001 Pinot Gris, featured at Ring of Fire, is dry, crisp, refined. Try also chardonnay and pinot noir.

Ron Kuhn at tiny Briggs Hill produces little wine, but it's big on flavor. Check them at Art and the Vineyard.

Domaine Meriwether has hauled their facilities to Carlton, but Eugene's still home, and to some of the best sparkling wine in the state. Dom. Meriwether's Capt. Wm. Clark Cuvee is just top-shelf.

There it is, Eugene's vino homies, with more coming. World-class quality for local bux; ain't that a gasser? Drink up, be happy, and don't forget to beat Bush. CW

The Power of PANINI

Grilled sandwiches go gourmet. BY BOBBIE WILLIS

If there's a rising star in the sandwich world right now, it would have to be panini. Panini (singular panino) are traditional Italian sandwiches that combine two kinds of old-fashioned goodness — that of artisanal breads and the familiarity of a grilled cheese sandwich — into something that feels fresh and newly discovered.

In Italy, the word panini means "small breads," describing the rolls used to make the sandwiches. These rolls are the first things that distinguish the panino from its grilled cheese cousin, giving both a good crust and a hearty chewiness to the final grilled product. Also, panini can be filled with anything from savory pesto, pungent Italian cheeses and salty deli meats, to milder, creamy cheeses with sweet jams or jellies for a dessert-like sandwich.

Finally, panini are grilled in a grooved sandwich press called, logically enough, a panini grill. The pressure and heat of the grill give the panino both its distinctive grill-marked crust and a melted, basically squashed (in the gourmet way) texture. The warmth and density of the sandwich seems to intensify the flavors of the fillings.

To see what's going on with panini in Eugene, I visited three delis and sampled the sandwiches. If you're pondering the panini, these three may convert you from your old grilled cheese forever ...

Tre Amici: The Beauty of Bread

Tre Amici is kind of hidden in the Wild Oats/BiMart shopping center across from Sheldon High School on Willakenzie. It is, however, worth the search. Not only will you find a long list of breakfast and lunch items, but you'll also be delighted to see a variety of coffee drinks, Italian sodas, and gelato desserts. It has plenty of seating, including a couple of outdoor tables, and the décor leans toward Tuscan yellows, reds and oranges with accents of black trim and cherry wood.

Here I order an Under the Tuscan Sun panino ($6.95) filled with Tuscan Soppressa salami, provolone cheese, roasted red peppers, extra virgin olive oil and balsamic vinegar all grilled on foccacia bread. Panini at Tre Amici come with a choice of soup or salad, and I order the soup — Turkey Corn Chowder.

The flavors of the sandwich combine very nicely: the mild provolone and fruity olive oil complement the strong flavors of the salami and balsamic vinegar. The roasted red peppers add just the right touch of sweet smokiness. The foccacia bread is really wonderful, maybe the best bread of my panini taste testing. It has a good crust, and the inside is tender and chewy — perfectly balanced. But this particular sandwich could use a few more minutes on the panini grill — it comes to me without the characteristic grill marks and not nearly as melted and warmed through as I expect. The Turkey Corn Chowder is dynamite: creamy, but not too rich, filled with chunks of potatoes, carrots, turkey and kernels of sweet corn.

Tre Amici has eight other panini selections to choose from, not to mention a whole slew of breakfast items, salads, wraps, and Italian specialty dishes.

City View Deli:

Classic Combination

At 8th Avenue and Park downtown, you'll find City View Deli, a hip little joint filled with big glass windows, lots of light, sophisticated colors and décor, and, at present, a gallery of city life paintings by Jim Derby that reflect the cool urban feel of the deli itself. It's a small space, but the height of the ceilings and predominance of windows give it the character of a much bigger area.

At City View, I order a Turkey, Bacon, Avocado, Lettuce and Swiss Cheese panini ($5.95), which comes with a side of Tim's Cascade Style potato chips and a pickle wedge. Of all the selections of panini I try, the one at City View looks the most like what I expect a panini to look like — the sandwich is built on a narrow roll, which is compressed and marked with diagonal strips of grill lines. The inside is dense and melted, and the flavors work well together — turkey, bacon and avocado make a classic combination, and the Swiss cheese pulls it all together.

The only thing about this sandwich is that on taking it as a to go order, the ride from the deli to the office leaves the dense bread overly chewy to the tooth. I'm guessing that eating it right off the grill in the restaurant makes for a better sandwich crust.

If you're looking for a place downtown to linger over a lunch hour of good food and great atmosphere, City View Deli will suit you just right.

45 E. 8th Ave. 242-3536. 8 am-3 pm M-F, 8 am-5 pm Sa. Wheelchair accessible.

Perugino:

Panini Perfection

Perugino is another downtown spot, on Willamette between 7th and 8th avenues. Perugino combines kind of an industrial brick and concrete style with beautiful lighting to create something that feels both like a large, sophisticated dining room and a casual, secret bistro. There's always a stunning gallery of artwork (right now, some really outstanding photography by Adrienne Adam), as well as displays of dramatic Italian pottery and ceramics.

At Perugino, I order the Fromaggio Semplice panino ($4.25). As the name suggests, this is a simple item: a crusty roll split and filled with slices of provolone and smoked gouda cheese, a layer of basil leaves, and some pesto I add for an extra fifty cents on the suggestion of the wait person. All these ingredients come together in perfect balance: chewy but tender bread with a crisp crustiness and a filling that melts and melds into simple, but sublime, harmony. Part of the secret at Perugino seems to be that the panini rolls are fairly flat, and they're sliced so that one side is markedly flatter than the other. The sandwich is also grilled long enough to leave golden brown grill marks, to melt the cheese with the pesto and to soften up the basil leaves just a little. Perugino definitely hits the mark in terms of my expectations for what a panino will look and taste like.

767 Willamette St. 687-9102. 6:30 am-10 pm M-W, 6:30 am-midnight Th-F, 8 am-midnight Sa, 10 am-10 pm Su. Wheelchair accessible. CW

CHOW! SPRING 2004

Breakfast of Champions

Pump Café wins over a fan for The Diner.

By Marina Taylor

Coming of age in a small town, much of my youth was misspent in diners, late at night when everything else was closed, or early afternoon when breakfast was no longer available anywhere else. The air in these diners was as greasy as the undercooked hashbrowns, the waitresses had dead eyes and the food was the last reason you'd ever want to come back. These experiences tainted my view of diners, and most breakfast foods, for a long time.

Fortunately, The Pump Café in Springfield offers the other side to the diner coin: a fresh, high quality restaurant with a neighborhood feel and a menu full of hand-crafted, delicious comfort foods. The first thing to convince me when I walked in, at the recommendation of many a friend, was the smell. The place smells wonderful: fresh coffee and cinnamon rolls (they make their own rolls every morning, $2.25 each). The place is a remodeled gas station, the tall garage doors permanently rolled up and replaced with bright south-facing windows. The wall space is filled with auto-oriented memorabilia, old license plates, uniforms, big saws from the glory days of lumber, and those paintings with the Christmas lights embedded in them to make the headlights in the cars and the streetlights glow. There are no vinyl booths, but a mismatched selection of antique oak tables and sturdy wooden chairs fill the open space in the two rooms.

Breakfast and lunch are the only meals served at The Pump, and they're done traditional style. Breakfast is bacon and eggs, biscuits and gravy, omelettes, Raspberry Cream Cheese French Toast, waffles, almost anything you could think to want. Lunch is hot and cold sandwiches (tall as mountains with nice crispy lettuce), fish and chips, burgers and fries of course, and salads. Fair warning on the menu, it gets a little cutsie. My favorite omelette, From the Ground Up!!!! (exclamation points are theirs, not mine) is a great veggie omelette packed with flavor.

It's the homemade touches that make the difference in any restaurant. It's an amazingly simple trick: homemade bread, sauce or burger can bring up the quality ratio exponentially over anything out of a can. The Pump Café transforms somewhat tired Americana classics into love-filled specialties. A bowl of oatmeal becomes a special treat if you order it with the caramel and nuts (left over from the cinnamon rolls, it's delicious). Homemade cornbread, biscuits, chili, soups — the hard work pays off in great taste.

There is a nice sense of familiarity and friendly welcome too: Regulars chat with the waiters, and when you clean your plate don't put it past your waiter to congratulate you ("Nice work there, honey!"). People linger over coffee and a newspaper, and I hated to finish the last drops of my perfect mocha, leave my sunny window seat and start my frantic day.

So maybe this is what a diner was really meant to be all along, and this is what the fuss is all about. A nice little spot, some friendly faces and food you can rely on. I'm glad I found it, or I'd spend the rest of my days in a diner-equals-Denny's world, which, unlike the Pump Café, is no place to be.

WIDMER  BROTHERS

CREATING AN EVEN BETTER BEER THROUGH FIELD RESEARCH

TEST SUBJECT: Jason Gearhart

WIDMER BEER OF CHOICE: Hefeweizen

CHOICE OF MUSTARD: Spicy Brown

— DAY 22 —

Today we tested the ideal "kindling mix" for proper brat grilling. The combination of chicory, half an abandoned hornet's nest and an old bra found underneath the subject's deck was deemed ideal. Next, we measured the effects of lemon on our Hefeweizen. Results proved to be delicious, with the flavor consistently scoring above 9.5 on the Rheinmann/Gruber Pleasure Scale.

Smoke caused only minimal hair loss.

Kurt and Rob put out small chemical fire before lunchtime.

The brat tested positive for Hefeweizen compatibility - and trace amounts of Actinium-238.

April 17, 2004

Earth Day Celebration 2004 is an environmentally based event that celebrates the Earth and its resources. The celebration will take place on Saturday, April 17, 2004 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on West Broadway and Willamette Streets. The event is brought to you by Downtown Events Management, Inc. (the folks who produce the Eugene Celebration) and the Earth Day Steering Committee.

EARTH ACTION ARENA

A variety of non-profit, government, and commercial groups will host environmental and educational booths in the Earth Action arena. The booths will present information, hands-on activities, and demonstrations related to local and global issues. Earth-friendly products and services will be presented to educate the public on eco-sensitive practices and sustainable principles.

EARTH ACTION ARENA BOOTHS

CHILDREN'S WORM BIN WORKSHOP

The Worm Digest Booth is returning this year with its fun-filled Children's Worm Bin Workshop! One hundred children will be invited to paint a small plywood worm bin, then shred and dampen newspaper for bedding. Just before the kids are sent home, a brief, entertaining lesson on worm care and feeding will be offered.

SHORT MOUNTAIN TOURS

Tour EPUD's Short Mountain Facility Plant, where landfill gases that cause global warming are captured and turned into electricity! Plan on a one hour round-trip, which includes travel to and from Short Mountain, and an informational tour of the plant. LTD is sponsoring the bus service, and a bus will be leaving the downtown LTD Station at 11:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m.

DON'T RIP 'EM, RECYCLE 'EM!

Plastic 6-pack Ring Recycling is new to Lane County. The BRING recycling booth will be collecting plastic 6pk rings and sending them back to the manufacturer to be shredded, washed and remanufactured into NEW 6pk rings. Families can bring their 6pk rings and hang them on the collection tree (bags and wads of 6pk rings will not be accepted, they must be neatly stacked or hung on the collection tree).

The BRING Recycling booth will also feature paper making with seeds. Kids and adults can make their own paper earth greeting card that can be planted in their garden at home.

THE WATERY WORLD

See a demo of the "Water Cycle," learn about the Eugene area watersheds, and play in the clay as you make models and maps of the lower Willamette basin as part of the Drop in the Bucket Brigade's educational efforts.

HYBRID CAR AND ELECTRIC BICYCLE DISPLAY

This year's event will feature a display of Hybrid Electric Vehicles (HEV) and other Earth friendly vehicles for the public to view and learn about. The Hybrid Vehicle is environmentally friendly having very low emissions and is energy efficient getting more than twice the gas mileage of comparable vehicles. People visiting the 2004 Earth Day Celebration will get an opportunity to see the most recent models that are available locally for purchase, along with other alternative vehicles such as the locally produced electric Gizmo. Representatives will be available to answer questions about gas mileage, super ultra low emissions, tax deductions, and prices. Every major car manufacturer in the world is planning to produce a hybrid vehicle, find out why!

COMPOSTER GIVEAWAY

Two composting bins, donated by the City of Eugene Solid Waste and Recycling, will be given away at 3 and 5 p.m. at the Main Stage (winners must be present to win). Entry tickets will be available at each Earth Action Arena booth. Visit every booth to increase your chances to win! Please keep your entries to one ticket per booth.

THE SUNROVER

Constructed as a demonstration of solar electric technology, the SunRover generates power from the sun. The blue photovoltaic (PV) panels mounted on top of the SunRover harness the sunlight to produce clean electricity. The SunRover can operate as a portable generator, delivering power to community events and educational demonstrations. Producing electricity with zero emissions and very little environmental impact, the SunRover has no moving parts and little maintenance is required. When parked at this location, the SunRover recharges onboard batteries and feeds excess power into EWEB's electric lines. The PV panels can produce up to 1080 watts of power in ideal conditions. In an average year in the Willamette Valley, the panels should produce about 1400 kilowatt hours. Using energy efficient (Energy Star7) appliances, this would be enough energy to power your refrigerator, clothes washer, dishwasher, television and microwave oven for an entire year.

To learn more about the SunRover or solar technology, contact Eugene Water & Electric Board's Energy Management Services at 484-1120 or stop by the SunRover at the Earth Day Celebration to find out more.

PROCESSION OF ALL SPECIES 2PM

PROCESSION OF ALL SPECIES:

Celebration of all creatures great and small! The Procession of All Species is an artistic celebration where participants honor all species of life on Earth. Anyone can join the Procession if they don a costume, mask, or other representation of their favorite plant, animal, ecosystem, or other natural wonder (but NO live animals, motorized vehicles or written signs).

The Procession will begin at 2:00 p.m., departing at Broadway and Willamette. It will wind through the blocks of downtown, appearing at Saturday Market, and resuming at Broadway Plaza. The always dynamic and rhythmic Samba Ja, Brazilian Troupe, will lead the way for all who are celebrating Earth's many species.

Face painting, mask and costume-making for the Procession will start at 11 a.m. on the west corner of Willamette and Broadway.

MECCA

Come make JUNK ART with MECCA! MECCA has been collecting items that are normally thrown in the garbage to create a collaborative community sculpture. They will also have a station where the community can make their own Earth Pin with recycled pins and stick vinyl. Don't miss the "JUNK REDUX," a show of local artists that use recycled material in their work. Check it all out at 62 West Broadway.

SOLAR POWER TOUR

Take a tour of a historic building in downtown Eugene that generates electricity from the sun. The Pacific Cooperative Building, located on 5th Avenue between Olive and Charnelton Streets, was built in 1928 as an egg gathering station. Later, the building was used as a fruit warehouse and beer outlet. Remodeled in 1987, the structure currently houses four businesses: a gift store, bike shop, a coffee/delicatessen outlet, and a natural clothing store.

As a part of Eugene Water & Electric Board's "PV Eugene" program, Pacific Cooperative Building owner Tom Bowerman became a commercial photovoltaic (PV) generator in Eugene. The facility utilizes 144 solar collectors installed on south-facing roofs to generate up to 25 kilowatts (kW). Under this program, EWEB purchases the entire output of this PV system.

The Solar Power Tour of the Farmer's Union Marketplace will be at 1 p.m. and 3 p.m., led by Tom Bowerman.

LTD EARTH DAY RIDE PROMOTION, APRIL 22

In combination with the attention brought to our environment on Earth Day, LTD will run the entire bus system at 25 cents for each trip to encourage people to try public transportation on April 22. Day passes will be available for $1 (50 cents for reduced fare).

Chocolate Angel Food Cake

Makes two 9-inch cake rounds.

Preheat oven to 275°.

2 1/2 c. egg whites

1 t. cream of tartar

1/2 t. salt

3 c. sugar

1 T. vanilla

1 1/2 c. cake flour, sifted

1/4 c. cocoa, sifted

Whip egg whites, salt and cream of tartar to soft peaks. Slowly add sugar; whip to stiff peaks. Add vanilla and mix. Fold in cake flour thoroughly. Spread batter into ungreased, parchment-paper lined pans. Bake in preheated oven until cake is browned and springs back when touched. Remove from oven and immediately invert onto cooling rack. When cool, place cakes right side up. Slice both cakes in half so that you have four round, thin layers. Place one layer on serving plate, spread with whipped cream filling (see recipe below) and strawberries. Top with next cake layer, repeat filling until all layers are used. For top layer, pipe whipped cream filling in swirls and garnish with whole strawberries.

Whipped Cream Filling

2 c. whipping cream

1 to 2 T. sugar

1 T. vanilla

Combine all and whip until stiff.

Happening Server

BY PAUL NEEVEL

Ginger Spears

"I like to keep moving, be active," says Ginger Spears, explaining why she always returns to restaurant work. "I don't like to sit down." Spears has been sitting down more than she would care to since knee surgery in March for a volleyball injury. She will be back as waitress and day manager at the Campus Glenwood soon after the restaurant reopens following spring-break remodeling. "I think I'm a servant at heart," says mother-of-two Spears, who began waiting tables at age 15 at Maya's Mexican Restaurant in Santa Barbara. "That's where I feel good - I'm a people pleaser." In 1990, not long after escaping California in favor of Eugene, she spotted the Willamette Street Glenwood from her apartment window. "It was the cutest place - used to have cloth curtains," she recalls. "I got a job. It wasn't my intention to stay forever." After nine years on Willamette, she became manager at the campus location in 1999. "I can't remember a day when I haven't been happy to go to work," she says. "I love the people. The food is good, or people wouldn't wait an hour for a table. Customers say, 'You treat me so special.' But I treat everyone special!"

DEANA NEWCOMB, TOUCHSTONE PICTURES, 2004

Texas History Lesson

A cautionary tale with human faces

A large-scale historical film, The Alamo didn't have a chance on Easter weekend against Passion of the Christ. This deliberate, solemn evocation of the famous 1836 battle that pitted a few embattled warriors for independence against a well-equipped, armed occupation force deserves a wider viewing than it may attract.

Co-writer and director John Lee Hancock grew up in the Gulf Coast Texas town where I lived in fourth grade. I heard the story of the Alamo throughout my public school education in Texas, where the study of Texas history is required. But if what you know about the battle is based on John Wayne's 1960 movie version, you may expect grandstanding, mythic heroics and jingoistic posturing. But Hancock has done his homework, and while he may have taken the gloss off the great names, he has made credible the sacrifice of their lives.

Early in the story, Gen. Sam Houston (Dennis Quaid), a troubled, hard-drinking military man, sends Jim Bowie (Jason Patric) and his ragtag band of irregular soldiers, back to San Antonio de Bexar (pronounced bay-are) to tear down the Alamo before the Mexican Army led by Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna (Emilio Echevarria) returns to occupy it. These guys do a lot of drinking, Bowie in particular. He swaggers about wearing the long knife that made him famous, even though he is quite ill with tuberculosis.

On the other hand, Lt. Col. William Travis (Patrick Wilson) has been sent to guard the Alamo and to stand there against Santa Anna. Travis is a bit thin-lipped and definitely a dandy, which does not help him win the allegiance of Bowie's men. But as his illness takes its toll, Bowie urges his men to follow Travis, who acquits himself in their eyes in a simple act of bravery.

Capt. Juan Seguin (Jordi Molla) is the leader of the Tejanos in the Alamo. He raises the moral questions about the war against the Mexicans. Tejanos are the Mexicans long settled in what eventually becomes Texas. They fought for independence from Mexico before the Anglos, called Texians, took up the cause. Travis sends Seguin to Houston with an urgent message before the attack.

Now add to this mix the Tennessee legend, Davy Crockett (Billy Bob Thornton), who enlivens all the men and gives them a hero to emulate. Crockett takes the limelight with both modesty and style, truly winning over their hearts with his fiddling. You can't watch anyone else if Thornton is on screen. This charismatic character is right for him in some endearing fashion.

The film's poignancy comes from the human way the characters are portrayed. I don't trust heroes.

Unlike most reviewers, I find a lot to like in the movie. It is not an action-packed war film, and that is good in my book. Crockett understands that his actions are influential, and while he doesn't look forward to dying in the mission any more than any soldier present, he accepts his responsibility to be clear about why they are fighting and to keep up the men's morale. The film's poignancy comes from the human way the characters are portrayed. The actors' understated performances add to the emotional quality of the work for me. I don't trust heroes.

The actual siege of the Alamo took place over 12 days, but on March 6, when the Mexican army advanced, the fighting was over in 90 minutes. All 189 Texian and Tejano defenders fell before Santa Anna's 2,500 men, of whom several hundred were killed.

As the film shows, the fight for Texas independence was not over. Spurred on by calls to "Remember the Alamo," recruits volunteered and were sent against the remainder of the Mexican army. The decisive victory was won by Gen. Houston in the Battle of San Jacinto, where a tall monument now honors them.

The Alamo, now playing in Cinema World and Cinemark, is highly recommended. CW

Eugene's Community Gardens Program

A place where people and plants can grow.

The Seeds

Since 1978, Eugene's community gardens have been growing friendships, community involvement and an appreciation of the land by giving residents the opportunity to cultivate their own garden.

The Land

- * Rent a plot at the new community gardens at Alton Baker Park,
- * Sign up on a waiting list for the new community gardens at Skinner Butte Park (Skinner City Farm), or
- * Find out where there are available plots at any of the four other community gardens in Eugene: Amazon, Mathews, Whiteaker, and River House.

Planting the Seeds

There are over 30 plots available at the new Alton Baker community gardens. Rent is $52 per year for a 20- by 30-foot plot and comes with access to water and leaf mulch. Access to a tool shed is available for an additional $10 per year.

A new worldview

WHAT THE BLEEP DO WE KNOW?:

Produced, directed and written by William Arntz, Betsy Chasse and Mark Vicente. Musical composer, Christopher Franke. Starring Marlee Matlin, with Robert Bailey Jr., Barry Newman, Elaine Hendrix, Armin Shimerman. Interviews with Amit Goswami, William Tiller, John Hagelin, Fred Alan Wolf, David Albert, Stuart Hameroff, Jeffrey Satinover, Andrew Newberg, Daniel Monti, Joseph Dispenza, Candace Pert, Ramtha, Khempo Yurmed Tinly and Miceal Ledwith. Captured Light. Lord of the Wind Films, 2004. Not rated. 120 minutes.

The breakthrough film you may have heard the buzz about, What the Bleep Do We Know? offers a brand new way of thinking through questions about consciousness, intentionality and the ability to make a difference in the world. But it begins with Amanda (Marlee Matlin) asking herself basic questions, which is where we all must start. What is reality? Who am I? Who are you? What is the purpose of my life? How can I change my life? How can I affect change in the world?

The answer to the last two questions: Change the way you think.

But the near impossibility of altering even the simplest habit has shown most of us that mega-changes such as this are way too encompassing to take on. Right, say the experts. Ideas such as this demand a new way of looking at reality. The interviewees in this film point toward developments in quantum physics as reasons to begin to change how we think about ourselves and our world.

The physicists, neurologists, anesthesiologists, physicians, molecular biologists, spiritual teachers, mystics and scholars in Bleep make a persuasive case that such a paradigm switch begins with people called the "cultural creatives," a demographic I've been writing for 20 years, the same people who go to see films such as this.

The film follows Amanda as her ordinary life begins to unravel, and she is faced with reality in flux. She is shaken by the experience of playing basketball briefly with a friendly 9-year-old boy, Reggie (Robert Bailey Jr.), who asks her, "How far down the rabbit hole of mysteriousness do you want to go?" He isn't being a smart-aleck. He really wants to know how deeply she intends to investigate other realities existing side-by-side with what we call the real world.

One of the most thought-provoking concepts in the film concerns the observer. We think we share with others the common experience of observing what is around us, that we know what we think and feel about what our senses experience. We may even "know" what we'll remember about the experience. That's an example of the dominant paradigm we currently operate within.

a brand new way of thinking . . . about consciousness, intentionality and the ability to make a difference in the world

Amanda (Marlee Matlin) feels changes in her life.

But the new science says it can't find the observer anywhere in the human body or brain. The I who observes is a function of consciousness, and the smallest form of consciousness in the body is the cell. Do we experience and communicate at the cellular level? On multiple levels of reality at the same time? And why can we look back in time but not forward? And why can't we change the past if we can change the future by our actions today?

Turns out scientists and spiritual teachers are talking about the same reality or realities. And we might as well go along for the ride, because if it turns out the only reality is the one we choose to make, we better start working on ourselves and changing our world view right away.

This is a fascinating and entertaining film experience. Not a boring minute in it. Highest recommendations. Starts at the Bijou this Friday, April 16.

Garaj Mahal plays the McDonald Theatre Thursday, April 22.

Eclectic Jazz

Garaj Mahal, Manischewitz span jazzy genres.

A 2000 jam session brought together four ace musicians with a résumé spanning stints with Sting, Steve Kimock, John McLaughlin, Bela Fleck and Chick Corea. That fate-tempting meeting was the root of the formation of Garaj Mahal, a four piece consisting of bassist Kai Eckhardt, guitarist Fareed Haque, drummer Alan Hertz and keyboardist Eric Levy.

Haque was born in 1963 to a Pakistani father and a Chilean mother. Extensive travels to Western Europe, the Middle East and Chile exposed Haque to a wide variety of music at a young age.

Eckhardt, born in 1961 in Mainz, Germany to a German mother and Liberian father, was raised in Germany and West Africa.

Hertz's background is solidly in the San Francisco Bay Area, where he is among the region's most sought after drummers. His collaborations with Steve Kimock (Zero, Other Ones, Phil & Friends), Bobby Vega (Zero, Jefferson Starship, Quicksilver), and Frank Zappa alumnus Ray White in 1998 became known as KVHW.

The group produces timeless jazz but doesn't stop there; the dish is livened up by a combination of funk, fusion, blues and world beats that causes Garaj Mahal to stand out in a crowded scene.

Eric Levy hails from the Windy City and was steeped in Chicago's gospel and blues traditions as well as jazz and classical. Interestingly, as Levy proceeded with his musical education at Northern Illinois University, Fareed Haque became his professor. Now, master and disciple jam together. What each member of the foursome brings to the mix is his own spice, seasoned by diverse backgrounds and experiences.

Together, they blend most deliciously into a pleasing assortment of grooves. The group produces timeless jazz but doesn't stop there; the dish is livened up by a combination of funk, fusion, blues and world beats that causes Garaj Mahal to stand out in a crowded scene. Garaj Mahal's first studio album, Mondo Garaj, has recently been released to wide acclaim, and a second album is in the works. Garaj Mahal plays the McDonald Theatre on Thursday, April 22nd.

Local jazz quintet Manischewitz is set to celebrate what would have been the 80th birthday of Henry Mancini, a versatile and multi-talented composer who brought soothing and invigorating themes to popular film and television programs.

Mancini was responsible for the irrepressible coolness of The Pink Panther and Peter Gunn. (Mancini scored all of the Pink Panther movies.) He took John Wayne to wildest Africa with the soundtrack for the 1962 movie Hatari. The film Breakfast at Tiffany's just wouldn't be the same without the Mancini-composed and conducted score. "Hubcaps and Taillights," "Mr. Yunioshi," and "Moon River" (with Johnny Mercer) never cease to thrill.

Born Enrique Mancini in Cleveland on April 16, 1924, he first burst onto the scene as a pianist-arranger for the Glenn Miller Orchestra, then under the direction of Tex Beneke. Hollywood welcomed Mancini with open arms, during which time he penned the unforgettable tunes we revere him for today.

Mancini's compositions were performed by the best jazzers of the time, allowing jazz buffs to go nuts and the casual music fan to revel in his inventive artistry.

This cross-musical love affair is being kept alive by Manischewitz: coronet and accordion by Michael Roderick, also of Eugene's Mood Area 52, Los Mex Pistols, Scrambled Ape, Wheel of Meat and RocketBoy Arts Records; alto sax by West Coast Rhythm Kings' and Mood Area 52's Kee Zublin; drums by James West (Justin King, Norma Fraser, the Habaneros); guitar by Gung Ho Recording Studios' owner Billy Barnett (who also plays guitar with other local celebrities, like Dan Jones and Ed Cole); and double bass by Eugene jazz musician Hamilton Mass.

The Mancini celebration happens Friday at the Downtown Lounge. Mood Area 52's tango-inspired original compositions will open the festivities, with film clips and Manischewitz following. For all you music lovers and philatelists, a commemorative postage stamp honoring Mancini, who died June 14, 1994, is scheduled for release on April 13th.

April Showers

World and classical music resound this week.

Our musically enchanted April continues Thursday the 15th at the UO's Beall Concert Hall when New York's Ethos Percussion Group plays new music derived from Brazilian dances, Latin jazz and Argentine folk music, as well as North American music by Steve Reich, Peter Garland and Michael Daugherty.

Anyone expecting mere crash and bang will be surprised by the Ethosians' nuanced performances on dozens of instruments, including soft, melodic marimbas. Ethos returns Saturday, augmented by two of India's finest musicians: tablawallah Samir Chatterjee and sarengi (bowed lute) master Ramesh Misra, in a program featuring ragas and other Indian influenced music.

It's a real credit to the sponsors, the UO's Chamber Music Series and the Hult Center, that they're willing to bring us this acclaimed but far from mainstream ensemble.

More ragas will resound on April 22 when Deepak Ram (bansuri) and Anuradha Pal (tabla) bring classical music of North India to the WOW Hall. Ram is a real master of that big, beautiful Indian flute, and has played in jazz as well as traditional settings, while Pal (a disciple of Zakir Hussein) can conjure a whole world of sounds from the tabla drum.

Another local "classical" institution that's programming world music is the Eugene Vocal Arts Ensemble, which joins two of our finest local world music groups, Balladina and Lo Nuestro, at the Hult Center on April 17 and 18.

The concert features music and dance from Eastern Europe and Latin America and choral music from Russia, China, Sweden, Israel, Africa, and North America. And speaking of great singing, don't miss the amazing Celtic chanteuse Susan McKeown, whose new album includes musicians from Mali and Mexico as well as the Emerald Isle. She plays the WOW Hall on the 28th.

The Eugene Symphony concert on Thursday, April 22 may be the best of what's been a remarkably accomplished and exciting season. Music Director Giancarlo Guerrero will bring one of America's greatest living composers, John Corigliano, to town for performances of orchestral suites drawn from two of his major works. I've loved Corigliano's colorful music ever since I heard his psychedelic score to Altered States, and the ESO's performance of his Pied Piper Fantasy a few years back. Since then, Corigliano has won acclaim and awards, including the 2001 Pulitzer Prize, for his two symphonies and many other works, but for me, his finest music is that inspired by dramatic subjects.

The film The Red Violin may have wallowed in melodrama, but Corigliano's score brilliantly evokes three centuries of Western violin. Our local opera company seems unlikely to bring us any contemporary or American opera anytime soon, so Phantasmagoria, which Corigliano originally arranged for Yo-Yo Ma, is the closest we're likely to get to hearing his quasi-sequel to the two great operas based on Beaumarchais' plays (Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro and Rossini's The Barber of Seville). It, too, features the composer's trademark wild and colorful orchestral effects and historical references.

The concert also features Beethoven's mighty Symphony No. 7, maybe the most magnificent music ever composed for orchestra. From the unbelievably compelling opening movement to the deeply moving second to the stirring finale, this masterpiece takes listeners on a glorious voyage to the pinnacle of Western classical music, and the ESO's two years of exploration of Beethoven have the orchestra — and the city — ready for the big payoff. If you see only one classical music concert this year, this should be it.

This month also features two of the world's finest bass players — and, naturally, they're appearing the same night. The Shedd brings classical/jazz/Americana virtuoso and composer Edgar Meyer on Friday, April 16, to play (with pianist Amy Dorfman) music of Vivaldi, Schubert, Chopin and more. Meyer, who's won awards ranging from Grammys to a MacArthur "genius" grant, has transformed the bass into a solo instrument that can lead a band, whether it includes his old bluegrass buddies Bela Fleck and Mark O'Connor, or more recent collaborators like Yo-Yo Ma or the Boston Symphony.

That same evening, Luna brings the great jazz bassist David Friesen back to town with his quintet. Through three decades and stints with masters such as Stan Getz, Dexter Gordon, and Clark Terry as well as today's masters, Friesen has drawn on folk, classical, and Jewish music to create a distinctive jazz idiom.

John Corigliano

Nature's Value is Intrinsic

An interview with Corvallis musician Siobhan.

Corvallis singer/songwriter Siobhan (pronounced Shovan) taught herself to play guitar after realizing music is a great way to share her poetry. Eleven years into her craft, Siobhan plays regularly around town, has one album out and is creating another.

During a phone conversation, in between her work as a massage therapist and yoga instructor, I was struck by the strength of Siobhan's voice and her beliefs, which enhance the soft melodies of her first album, Love Lives in the Earth. Siobhan's message of universal love, healing and the sacred earth punctuated our conversation. She is a woman with a mission — healing the planet — and she hopes her music will inspire others to walk that path.

EW: Tell me about yourself.

S: I want to share with others that we are not superior to nature, as many religious and scientific systems have told us. At the same time, I do not label myself an environmentalist. I care for humanity and do not want to separate myself from anyone, logger, oil driller, no one. The message of my music is compassion for one another, all beings, and supportive healing of ourselves. And healing has to come from the individual's sense of compassion for oneself.

EW: How has the Oregon land influenced your work?

S: The salmon spawning, the majesty of the landscape, the diverse ecology from oceans to desert to mountain, the amazing water systems ... the remaining wilderness is really valuable, beyond a resource extractive system. The value of nature is intrinsic — it is valuable because it is, not because of something we put onto it.

EW: In your song Touch Tenderly you share a positive sensual experience you had with another person. The lack of romantic angst throughout Love Lives in the Earth is striking. What are you expressing about human relationships in this song, and can we expect more?

S: In Touch Tenderly, I am trying to express the importance of touch in our lives as a way to maintain contact with one another. Touch is a form of non-verbal communication and it is incredibly healing.

Love Lives in the Earth is definitely a concepts CD. It is talking about things as a whole, rather than my personal relationships. That has already been sung. On my next album, I am more personal. Of course, the pronouns of my new songs are my grandmother, my best friend, as well as my life partner.

Music is an avenue to get my message across, the lyrics are my message. And each song is like a journal entry, capturing a certain experience, a certain time, a certain place, a certain relationship. My songs are love songs to the world — other creatures, humans, the planet.

EW: Who is your audience?

S: My audience is everyone, each human being.

EW: In what ways do you attempt to live eco-consciously as a musician?

S: That's a good question. By not over-consuming electricity. I donate a portion of my album proceeds to international conservation efforts. Making the theme of my album one of Earth consciousness was an important choice. To be honest, I get overwhelmed by this issue, so I just do what I can do, take time to heal and rest.

EW: In the song Endangered you say, "Wake up to the beauty/ don't let her die away/ Act as a steward/ to guide her fate." How do you suggest environmental activists respond to the destructive actions you sing about, such as the proposed oil drilling in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge and deforestation?

S: Vegetarianism is the number one thing you can do — eating a plant-based diet means having compassion for animals and biodiversity. Limiting electricity usage, not taking long showers, not driving as much. It's important to create a lifestyle for yourself because each person is a ripple in this massive effect.

I have a deep respect for the people sitting in trees. I do respect everyone that's doing something. At the same time, and I hesitate to say this, I do not think that there is a place for violence in the movement. Monkey wrenching just makes us look bad. The most important thing to do is what is close to home — buying locally, understanding bioregionalism, making choices. And always seeking healing, for yourself and every person you meet.

EW

Siobhan will be performing at 2 pm Saturday, April 17, at Planet Goloka. She performs in Corvallis regularly.

MY SONGS ARE LOVE SONGS TO THE WORLD — OTHER CREATURES, HUMANS, THE PLANET.

New Dances

And farewell, ballerina

Brett Mills, who has been with the Eugene Ballet Company for more than a decade, gives her last performances this weekend when the company presents its final concerts of the season in the Silva Hall, Hult Center, Saturday night at 8 pm and Sunday afternoon at 2 pm.

Mills has made us laugh as the cowgirl in Agnes deMille's Rodeo and the lady at the party in Lynn Taylor Corbett's In a Word. She has made us weep as Giselle and Juliet and was a perfect Alice in company artistic director Toni Pimble's Alice in Wonderland. And last season in the Firebird, she textured the title role with magical power and an avian port de bras.

In addition, this technically versatile dancer has been a gifted interpreter of Pimble's more contemporary works, particularly Slipstream and Still Falls the Rain, which are among the 35-year-old dancer's favorites.

"After 11 years I'm sorry to lose her," Pimble said of Mills in a recent interview. "She's a joy to work with. She gives a hundred percent in rehearsals, dances full out.

She's grown tremendously in her artistry, and she excels in romantic roles like Giselle and Juliet, [in which] she has a vulnerable quality that makes her believable. And she was a lovely Titania in A Midsummer Night's Dream." Speaking of Mills' physical attributes as a dancer, Pimble mentioned her "amazing" arabesque and supple back, as well as her acting talents.

Mills will be moving to Portland with her pastry chef husband. She hopes to teach dance and to learn silversmithing in Portland. In a telephone interview from Idaho, Mills noted that Pimble is unique as an artistic director. Mills, who danced with Ohio's Ballet Met and Ballet Iowa before joining the Eugene Ballet, said, "She's fair and appreciates the dancers. And I respect the way she runs rehearsal. I love her style, especially her taste in music."

In this weekend's season-closing repertory evening, Mills, partnered by Hyoung-Il Joung, will reprise Juliet in the balcony pas de deux from Romeo and Juliet, an aching lovely dance about first love in which Pimble's choreography makes the viewer hear Shakespeare's language as acutely as Prokofiev's score.

Mills' technical versatility will be more than apparent in a section of Pimble's new Jitterbug, Jive & Jazz, a collaboration with the Oregon Festival of American Music's Emerald City Jazz Kings, who will perform live such songs as "Leap Frog," "My Funny Valentine," "Floatin'" and "Have You Met Miss Jones?" The work, which closes the show, is part of a continuum of Pimble tributes to American culture — this one to the big band sound and the swing era — that includes Silent Movie and Children of the Raven.

Mills and the rest of the company had to learn a completely new way of moving for this piece, the floor-bound rhythms of the Lindy Hop and Jitterbug being fairly antithetical to the elevated jumps and tiny steps on pointe of classical ballet. In one section the women are on roller skates. In another they take the poses of the pin-up girls in the watercolors of Vargas and DeVorss.

The program opens with Pimble's Concerto for Seven Dancers, a piece for three women and four men set to Johann Sebastian Bach's Concerto for Three Violins, which premiered last July during the Oregon Bach Festival. "The movement is simple and fun," Pimble said, "but the music is quite complex."

Following intermission, principal dancers Jennifer Martin and Hyuk ku Kwon will deliver classical fireworks in what is known in the trade as the "Don Q pas de deux," the oft-performed star-turn from the Petipa-Minkus, evening-length Don Quixote, which had its company premiere several seasons ago. In marked contrast, Pimble has programmed choreographer Robert Battle's Circle, Line, Square, a trio of dances whose shapes and style are described in the title of the piece.

An interesting balance of classical and contemporary dance showcases the company's increasingly strong complement of men as well as the departing Mills. Live music accompanies Pimble's new work. After a season of story ballets, this program really shows the company at its most versatile.

Doerner Fir

It's Oregon vs. Washington for the Douglas fir crown.

The timber industry in Oregon has had no better friend than Mark Hatfield. As governor from 1959-67, and then as Senator from 1967-97, he sponsored one bill after another that mandated the wholesale liquidation of ancient forests on public lands. With perverse irony, he delighted in goading his Washington colleagues about the superior size of Oregon's Douglas fir trees.

In 1962, Oregon's "Clatsop Fir" was toppled in the Columbus Day storm and a Washington tree claimed the national title. "I want to assure you that your champion's crown must perforce rest uneasy in view of the obviously more favorable habitat for growth of large trees in Oregon," Hatfield wrote to Washington's governor. "Surely there is a tree somewhere in Oregon's magnificent forest lands which is of equal or greater stature than the Clatsop Fir. As soon as this tree is found you will be notified."

It took 13 years before a new record Doug was located in Oregon — which promptly blew down in another November storm. It wasn't until 1991 that the Doerner Fir, which dwarfed the Washington competition, was discovered west of Roseburg.

Enter Bob Van Pelt, an obsessive record stalker, who located the current national champion on the Olympic National Forest in the late '90s. Today, Washington retains big tree bragging rights, although Van Pelt agrees that Oregon should have the largest tree, but for the fact that the ideal growing conditions found in Oregon's coastal valleys are also the scene of the most intensive clearcutting on earth.

It's a long drive to see a second-place finisher, but the Doerner Fir is worth the trip. To get there, drive I-5 south of Eugene for 65 miles. Take the Roseburg Garden Valley exit (#125). Take a right off the exit onto Garden Valley Boulevard. At the first light, take a left and buy a Coos Bay District/Siskiyou National Forest Recreation Map from the Roseburg BLM headquarters.

Continuing west on Garden Valley Boulevard, stick to the left lane and turn left onto Melrose Road, two miles from the freeway exit. Travel Melrose Road for five miles to a T-intersection and take a right on Flournoy Valley Road (Douglas County Route 51). Take 51 for six miles and make a right on the Coos Bay Wagon Road. In 6.1 miles, stay right on Burnt Mountain Road (BLM Road 28-8-16.0). In 7.3 miles, stay left on 28-8-16. In 4.7 miles take a left on 27-9-21 (sign for Brummet Creek).

Up to this point, the roads have been paved and easy to drive (watch for log trucks). 27-9-21 is a single-track gravel road with several rough spots, but doable in a passenger car. Stay to the right and find the trailhead in 4.3 miles. The trail is about a half mile long and poorly maintained. It's not a strenuous hike, but you'll have to navigate around lots of downed wood.

Don't be intimidated. Buy the map and make the trip; you won't regret it. The big tree aside, this trail will take you through some of the finest cathedral forest in the Coast Range. Signs along the trail claim that Oregon still holds the record.

Champion trees are determined by a complicated formula that awards points based on height, trunk circumference, and crown spread. The Doerner Fir is 329 feet tall, 48 feet taller than the record Washington tree. It's 11.5 feet across, 2 feet skinnier than its counterpart to the north. Our tree's crown is also slightly less broad.

The Doerner Fir contains enough wood to build five homes and weighs more than two fully grown blue whales.

The big tree competition's not over — and Canada may be the team to beat. In 1998 Van Pelt located a new record, a Douglas fir in British Columbia that is a staggering 14 feet in diameter. There are a number of largely unexplored — and unlogged — coastal valleys in B.C. that will undoubtedly yield new tree records, although surely none as impressive as those that fed Oregon's mills in days past. The tragedy of old-growth logging in Oregon hasn't run its course yet, either. Not three miles from the Doerner Fir (off the 28-9-3 spur), the Coos Bay Bureau of Land Management District is proposing the East Fork Coquille timber sale, which would log trees more than eight feet in diameter and 450 years old. There are currently thousands of acres of old growth on the chopping block on BLM lands throughout the Oregon Coast Range.

In the past year, Washington federal forests have ceased all logging of ancient coastal Douglas fir.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY JOHN
You're life has so much meaning to me. Thanks for making the last seventeen years a joy. From the moment I first saw your pudgy baby face to the last time I saw your wavy hair bob out the door, I've known I am proud to be your father.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY DEENA!
Recognize your friend, co-worker, and boss celebrating her birthday last year? We are guessing she had one too many shots of Tequila! Why else would she be wearing that hat, sporting that cheesy smile and grabbing herself? Yeah, it had to be the tequila. Watch out for her this Saturday night!

SMITH / JONES WEDDING
Theodore Smith and Victor Jones are thrilled to announce their exchange of wedding vows, April 3, 2004. Smith, a die cast technician, was born in Medford and lives in Veneta. Jones, a certified arborist, is a native of Eugene. The couple plans to live in Eugene.

SHAMANIC HEALING

Shamanic Healing addresses the spiritual aspects of physical, mental and emotional illness. It works well in conjunction with traditional and/or alternative health care practices. Possible symptoms calling for Shamanic Intervention are:

- not feeling whole
- "part of me left" or "I haven't been the same since"
- chronic illness, depression or fatigue
- addictions
- feelings of possession, darkness, or alienation

A one time Healing Empowerment Ceremony can address the issues & restore the integrity of the soul force. There is also a monthly drumming & journey circle to support your ongoing process.

free will astrology BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Due to a confluence of unusual astrological influences, you've been temporarily authorized to act as if you are the love child of comedians Chris Rock and Margaret Cho. Here's some of the behavior you have a cosmic license to express: 1. Expose hypocrisy with uproarious honesty. 2. Lay yourself bare as a way to educate and inspire others. 3. Shock people awake with irreverent new spins on traditional subjects. 4. Risk being annoying in order to be a servant of the hilarious truth. 5. Be edgy and healing, disruptive and inspiring, half-crazy and profoundly real.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In my opinion, you're perfect just the way you are. Everything about your life is exactly how it should be. You're right on schedule to fulfill the mission you came to earth to carry out. The paradoxical thing is, though, that you can become even more perfect, and make your life even more completely what it could be, and expedite your progress in accomplishing the mission you came to earth to carry out. This week is an ideal time to understand how these seemingly contradictory truths can co-exist.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Have you guessed that 2004 is the best year ever to coordinate the parts of your life that have always worked at cross-purposes? Do you realize how much power you now have to unify opposites? Please intensify your efforts to strike a dynamic balance between the impulses of your mind and the yearnings of your heart. Raise your expectations as you strive to create a more perfect blend of freedom and commitment. Summon an almost extreme faith in your ability to be both a charismatic star and a cooperative team player.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The editors of the Old Farmer's Almanac have proposed a new generation of superstitions. Never sing in bed, they warn, or wear just one shoe. Avoid putting the wrong key in a lock, and never lay a broom on a bed. The doomsayers of the mainstream media do the same thing as the Old Farmer's Almanac all the time, of course. They drum up an ever-fresh supply of reasons why you should walk around paranoid, although they pretend their scary fantasies are more real than those of the Almanac. My feeling, Cancerian, is that it's a perfect time for you to rebel against every kind of compulsive fright-mongering, whether it originates with the professional perpetrators of mass anxiety or in the depths of your own unconscious. To get started, sing in bed while lying next to a broom and wearing one shoe.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): According to the New York Daily News, Leo novelist Danielle Steel had a tailor embroider the word "bitch" on 16 pairs of her socks. I suggest you do the same. If that's too extreme or time-consuming, write "hard core" on your ankle with a felt-tip marker. If that would sully your dignity, at least imagine that you have a tattoo on the sole of your foot that says "wise-guy" or "riot grrrr!" The point is not to send a tough message to the general public, but to make a secret pact with yourself. No one else but you needs to know that you're planning to become better grounded and more fiercely assertive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It's time for a check-in, Virgo. What progress have you been making in your work on this year's big opportunities? As I suggested last December, you'll attract unexpected help in 2004 by growing the parts of your life that are small and timid and immature. Likewise, you'll generate good luck any time you enlarge your sphere of influence and energize your ambitions. Thirdly, you'll feel more and more at home in the world if you aggressively seek out interesting responsibilities that liberate you from your old images of yourself. My sense is that you've been doing OK in all these tasks, but there's room for improvement. The coming weeks are the perfect time to kick your efforts into high gear.

Homework: What can you do this week to surprise or amaze yourself? Testify at www.freewillastrology.com

You can call Rob Brezsnay, day or night, for your EXPANDED WEEKLY HOROSCOPE: 1-900-950-7700 • $1.99 per minute • Touchtone phone 18 & over • c/s 612-373-9785
